

Noꝛ other folke to rede that part of their bookes. And therfoze as I would aduise any man neither to rede these heretikes bookes noꝛ myne, but occupie their mindes better, and standing firmly by the catholike faith of thys, xv. C. yere, neuer ones muse vpon these new fabled heresies; so on the tother syde if it misse-B happe any man to fall in such a fond affeccion and vayne curiouse minde, that neither peryll tempoꝛall in byrch of his piaces proclamacion and the lawes of the realme, noꝛ the peryll spirituall in hurtling of hys own soule, noꝛ thei both to gether by putting hymself in dainger to burne both here and in hell, ca hoide hys itchyng fingers from their poisoned bookes, then would I counsaile him in any wyse to reade ther w such thinges as are wrytten agaynst them, and way them both at the lest wyse indifferently, and not to fal sodenly so dronke in h new myst of their newefangled newel-C tyes, that the olde hollsome wine with whych good folke haue lpyed now this fiftene hundred yere, offend their dronken taste, because it is not so walo we swete but drinkeh moze of the verber.

Luce. 17.

Foꝛthermoze foꝛasmuch as accoꝛdyng to the wordes of Christ. It will none other wise be, but that some stumblinge blockes wyll alway bee by maliciouse folke laied in god peoples way, though beste were to stoppe your eares bitterly and giue none herayng to any false enchauntoꝛs that woulde bytwich you wylpse, to make you delpte in those bookes: yet sith some that be plaine and symple may foꝛtune to be secretly mislede by false wply shewes excepte they D be well armed befoze, I doubte not by Goddes grace but if thei rede syke the thinges that are wrytten agaynst them, they shall theymsel be able to reiecte & confounde any deuill that would draw them to them. And therfoze as I am sure that euill & vngraciouse folke shall euer finde the meanes that such bookes shall neuer in some coꝛners lack, wher by good people may bee deceined & coꝛrupted: it is moze then necessari that me haue againe at hande, suche bookes as may well arme them, to resist & confute them. Of which kinde of good bookes albeit I know wel ther may & dout not but ther shalbe, many better made the mine & y soe such I se already: yet haue I not so lightly seue vnto mine own, noꝛ thofled it by so harsell, noꝛ let it sapsse vnloked ouer by better men and better learned also the my self but that I trust in god it may amonge the better stande yet in some good stede. And that it so may to gods honnyr and the profite of some good folke, I hartely beseeche our loꝛde, without the adspiracio and helpe of whose especiall grace no labour of man can profite, and to whom therfoze be all thanke refered, which liueh and teigneth in eternall gloꝛy. To whych as he hath al redy brought many a blessed fait: so mote hys mercy bring with spede the soules that are in purgatoꝛy, and giue vs that here liue in thys wretched woꝛlde, ayde and help of grace by true faith and good woꝛkes to folowe them, the rather by the intercession and prayers of all hys holy sayntes that are already wpyh. Amen.

The pꝛeface of Tindall with the aunswere vnto the same.

Tindall.

The grace of our loꝛde, the light of hys spirite, to see and so indgetrewe repentance to ward gods lawe a fast faith in the mercifull promyses that are in our sauour Christ, feruent loue toward thy neighbour after the sample of Christ and hys saintes, be with the (Reader) & wpyh all that loue the trouth, and longe foꝛ y redemption of gods elect. Amen.

More.

Tindall here beginneth with an holpe salutacio, & so doth Luther to, and so doth frere Huskine to, & so doth euery sonde felow of any of their sectes. They begin thete piffles in such apostolical fashio, that a ma would wene it wer writte fro saint Paule himself. But woulde God they would ones rather folow him truly in faith & good woꝛkes, then in simulacio of like lantytie with their holy salutacions. Foꝛ if me consider y where Tindall here prayeth holply foꝛ the lyght of the spirite to see trewe repentance, he then teacheth hymself a sodaine sleighte repentaunce, foꝛ bedding both confessio & all

All doynge of penance: thei shall if they be god men set litle by his holy salutation. And to be thei consider that where he prayeth god sende them a fast faith, hymself teacheth a false sayth against the sacramentes, and meaneth that thei should be fast in the same: there will no good Chyristen man can hym thank for that holy praitour. And wher he prayeth here so holply for the loue of the neyghbour, if me loke on the loue that is bled amonge all the maysters of that whole holy secte, and consider their liuinges, and looke vpon frere Luther the very father of their hole secte, & see hym rûne out of religion, and fallen to fleshe and caren and liue in lechery with a nunne vnder name of wedlocke, & al the chiefe heddes of them late monkes, and freres and now apostatas and liuinge wyth harlotes vnder the name of wyues: he that lookyth on thys and then seeth them and theyr scoles, as Tindall here and such other come forth & spake so holply, woulde he not weene that yt wer a sort of freres folowing an abbot of misrule in a chrystemas game y wer pycked in blankettes, and then should stande by and preache vpon a stoole and make a motyng sermon. And as lewde sermons as they make in suche noughty games, woulde god that these menues earnest sermons were not pet much worse. But surely as euill as the tother be, yet is ther moze harme & moze deadlye popson to in thys one sermone of Tyndalles, as ye shal here or it come at the ende: then in an hundred sermons of frere Frappe, that fyrt gapeth & the blesseth, and loketh holily and precheth ribaldrye to the people y stand about. For there is not the worse thinge that frere Frappe precheth in a lewdesport: but father Tindall here writeth muche worse in very great earnest, and muche worse then doth the tother abusethe the scripture vnto it. The tother when he precheth that men may lawefully go to lechery, he maketh comenly some sonde textes of his ownde hed, and dare not in such mad matters meddle wyth the very scripture it selfe. But Tindall teacheth vs in good earnest that freres may walk out and wedde nunes, and is neither aferde nor ashamed to drawe the holy scripture of god vnto the maintenance of abhominable sinne & seruite of the deuill. The tother ribalwe in hys sonde sermon medleth but with fleshy vices and woildely wantonnesse. But

Tindall here with an earnest hyge p-fection of godly spirituall doctrine teacheth vs a false faith and many moztal heresies, & woulde to scripture destroye the scripture, and amidde his earnest holynes falleth in to mockes & mowes, and maketh in ad apithe resting against the holy certinonies and blessed sacramentes of our sauour Chyist, and the thinges sanctified with y blessed blood of our sauour Tindall turneth in to scozne. Neuer was there any scoffynge frere frappe preaching vpon a stoole, that durst playe the knauiche foolle on such a fashion as ye shal see Tyndal do here. For if any shoulde, hys audience (werer they neuer so wanton) woulde pet at such woordes (if any sparke of chyist zele remained in their hartes) pul down the ryhaulde by the skyrt, and bzeake y stoe vpon hys hed. And now where as he saluteth vs to the light of y spirite, & entendeth to bzinge vs in darcknes of the deuill, where he speaketh of trew repentaunce, and then woulde put away two partes thereof, that is to wyt both confessyon and satisfaccion, and where he speaketh of fast faithe, and then teacheth a false presumptuose faith, with such trust put in sayth alone that he rekeneth all good woikes frutelesse & vnprofitable, & that faith alone suffileth to saluacion howe deuillishly that any man liue beside: we may well perceue that these that so teache, be wyth theyre holy salutations the false ydle ppheres of whom the blessed apostle Paule writeth vnto the Romains, y by their swete blessinges wast out and empye y pooze wydowes houses. For by such holy salutation, as by swete blessing, praying for them, so good thinges as they seme to do they wyne their hartes to assent after to theyr heresyes, and so expel and kyl trewe sayth in their hartes, & God so taken from them they make the wydowes, and so waste and empty out the substanciall vertues of their soules. But now when he speaketh of seruent loue after the ensample of Chyist & hys saintes, as earnest as the matter is, who can for bere laughing when he seeth the lecherouse fleshely loue of those freres and theyr nunes, wherof tyll Tindal ca tell vs some like ensaples of Chyist and his saintes, that anye of the were wonte to bzeake theyr bolwes of chastitie, and fal to such filthy lechery, tyll he can tell vs, that we may well tel hym that hys holye prayer of seruent loue

B

C

Frere Frappe

D

Roma. 16.

A lone here in his prologue, goeth quite against hys purpose shamesh all hys hole booke after. Wherefore good Christen readers who so shal happē to reade his pernicious booke, take wisdomē to you as I doubtē not but ye will, and be not so ledde with a fewē paynted holy wordes as it were with the beholdinge of a peccokes taylor but that ye regarde therewith hys fowle feete also, and loke well whither he walketh and to what ende he speaketh, and consider hym by the hed maisters, & archeheritiques of hys vngacious secte, which when they haue spoken as religiously as he, yet haue as ye se wel shamefulli shewed the selues open incestuouse harlottes, and that of the most abhominable sorte deflowring religious women. And Tyndall himself (which thing is worse then the deede doing) mayntaineth in hys boke their deede for well done.

Tindall.

Tindall is now the holy ghost sent downe from heauen to rebuke the iudgement of all christen-dome this xv and thall proue that the taste of their C. pere passed.

Our sauour Iesus in the xvi. chapter of Iohn at his lasse supper when he toke hys leaue of his disciples warned the sayeng, the holyghost shal come and rebuke the woꝛde of iudgement, that is he shal rebuke the woꝛde for lacke of trewe iudgement & discretion to iudge, and thall proue that the taste of their C. pere passed.

Swete to be souze & souze to be swete: & theyz eyes to be blind, so that they think that to be very seruice of God which is but a blinde supersticion, for zels of which yet they persecute y trewe seruice of god: and that they iudge to be the law of god which is but a false imaginaciō of a corrupt iudgement, for blinde affectiō of which yet they persecute the trewe lawe of God and them that kepe it.

More.

How sone might a poze symple soule be led to thinke, that all those y beliene not as Tyndall doth, wer in a wꝛog way & in a false beliefe, whē he heryth Tyndall here lay agaynst the the woꝛdes of our sauour himself spoken vnto hys dyscyples in his last supper. But now they y bee learned and knowe the place in the gospell, perceiue very wel that Tyndall here synfully doth abuse the holy woꝛdes of Christ, and manifestly misfurneth the mynde and sentence of our sauour, folowing, the example of y deuill that alleged the scripture vnto Christe in deserte. For as the deuill there falsely wꝛessed the scripture of God, and layed it against God: so dothe Tyndall here wꝛess the woꝛde of our sauour against himself and his whole church, I sai his whole church not the clergie onely, but the hole congregacion of all christen people. For it is well knowne that Christe spake those woꝛdes agaynst the Jewes and Paynims that refused hym and hys true faith, shewing that y holy ghost at his conning shoulde reprove their false iudgement, and their vnsaue-rye taste, that iudged swete souze and souze swete, and that he shoulde teache hys church and his congregacion the very truthe & leade them into all truth that shoulde be necessary for their saluaciō. And thys promise hath our sauour both made in the gospell and also fulfilled in deede. For the holy ghost hath not sayled to teache hys church al suche kinde of truth from the begynnyng hitherto nor neuer shal cease so to do, as well by hys own holy secrete woꝛde writte in y scripture & yet by himself writte in christe mes hartes, as by his holy scripture either writte in tables of stone or in beastes skintnes, according to hys own woꝛdes spoken as wel by y mouth of the prophete Ezechiel, as of y blessed apostle saie Paule. These trouthes had the apostles, the martyrs, y cofessours, the holy doctours of Christes church, and the comen christen people of euery age from Christes death hitherto. And in this comen knowē church of christe-dome (except suche as at sondꝛye tymes haue fallen there from, as Arius, Pelagius, Donatus, Wicliff, and Hulle, and such other, and nowe Luther, and Tyndal, & frere Huskyn, and theyz fellows) hath euer the trewe iudgement remained & the ryght sauozed taste, and neuer lost any of those heretiques these necessary trutthes till the deuill had thꝛough pryde, enuy, and malice made the sette nought by the church. And thē did he cast them forthwith in such a feuer that they clene lost theyz taste, and then byd they as Tyndall doth nowe, iudge swete that al christe-dōe iudged souze. And by those trutthes and this faith alway from the beginning kept in Christes church bee we nowe very sure that this new faith of Luther, Tyndal, and frere Huskin is verye sonde and false, and that theyz moutnes are all oute of taste, lithe that from Christes death hitherto all holy men, all good people, al true christen naciōns, haue sauozed alway Ezechiel. 2. Corinth. 3.

The church neuer lost the truthe.

A waye those meates to be good and holsome, which these sode felowes affirme now to be bitter and perillous meate, and haue alwaies affirmed for vnsaue-rie meate and cuill, such as nowe these mad men affirme to be well seasoned & good, & haue alwaies hitherto reputed for shamefull and filthy lechery, & fleshly coupling to gether of freres & nunes & these losels now do boldly put for the and auow for good and lawfull matrimony. If Tindall graunt that I saue trew in this, then shall he bee faine to B graunte that the wordes which he allegeth against vs spokē by the mouthe of our sauour be not spoken against vs & beleus as all Chyristes church hath be-leued euer hitherto, but that thei be spoken against himselve & his felowes that belieue the contrarie. And on the other side yf Tynndall deny me thys, and will saye that al good men and gods electes haue alwaie beleued as he and hys felowes do teache, and that they haue al-way taught & done the same: let Tyndall then tell vs one good honest man, what speake we of honest man: let hym

C tell vs of anye one so verpe a farke ribawld in al thys. xv. C. yere afoze Lu-thers dayes and hys, that euer taught & it was lawefull for a frere to wedde a nunne. If Tynndall thewe you not this as I wot well he cā not: than be ye very sure that sith euery holy mā before hys dayes hath taught the contrary, & hath had it in detestacion, & he now defedeth it for good against al good mē & hath ben euer since Chyristes daies to his owne, how holy a tale so euer he tel you beside & howsoeuer he pait it to scripture, wri-then and wrested out of al good course, ye may be sure ynough & hys doctrine is for all & very farke naught in deede and that he meaneth no good, and that if he belleue as he teacheth, as I verely belleue he doth not, hys sayth is verpe falle.

Tindale.

And this same is it that Paule saith in the seconde chapter of the first epistle to the Cozinthians, how that the naturall man that is not bozne againe and created a newe with the spirite of god, be he neuer so great aphilosopher, neuer so well seene in the lawe, neuer so soze studied in the scripture, as we haue en-samples in the pharasis: yet he cā not vnderstand the thinges of the spirite of god, but (saith he) the spirituall iudgeth all thinges, and his spirite sercheth the depe secretes of god, so that whatsoener god commaundeth hym to doo, he neuer leaucth serching till he come at the botom, the pith, the quicke, the life, the spirite, the mary, and very cause why, and iudgeth all thing.

More.

Consider well that Tindall in these wordes woulde ye should weene these folke of whom saint Poule speaketh in that place, be such as cā not sauour the doctrine of Luther, frere Hulkin, and hym. But then consider again vpon whome hys wordes fall. For ye doubte not noz himself cā not deny, but that his doctrine is farre from the taste of saint Austen, saint Hieroe, saint Ambrose saint Cyprian, saint Gregory, & al those olde holy doctours of Chyristes church vnto Luthers dayes and hys, or els as I saide let him tel me which of al theim did not abhorre & a priest should wedde a nunne. And therefore thus ye see that by Tindals holy tale ther were none of all the were they neuer so great philosophers, neuer so well seene in the lawe, neuer so soze studied in scripture, that coule vnderstand & thinges of the spirite of God, because they were

Saint Poule
in that place speaketh not of any serche
that spirituall men shoulde make of the cause of gods commaundētes, but Tindall saith that thing to finde by the serche of the cause the discharge of that commaundē-
t.

C

but naturall men not bozne againe noz created a newe with the spirite of God.
How knoweth Tindale that none of al these that hath bene aduersaries to hys doctrine, that is to witte of all good mē & euer were in chyristendome sith Chyrist was bozne vnto Tindalles time, was bozne againe or newe created with the spirite of god. How himselve vnderstand deth his high spirituall wordes I wote nere, but I wote wel, that al those holy fathers were reputed for good chyristen, and I weene they were al baptized and bozne againe of water and the spirite as our sauour saied vnto Nichodemus, & after that thei liued well & spiritually, & died wel & spiritually, as apperech by their bookes & histories writte of thep-lyues, and miracles thewed for thepof god after they deathes. And vnto such simple grosse carnal prople as we bee, these thinges seeme well to thewe that thei were bozne againe of god and newe created with his spirite, and so by Tindals owne tale should seme able to vnderstand the thinges of the spirite of god. But yet wil Tindale none of that.
For he liketh not their iudgement, but he saith that the spirituall iudgeth all thinges. And where as saith Paule in that place alledged by Tindall saith that the

John. 3.

Tindale
tareth here
saint Poule
at hys pleasure. For saith Poule speaketh not there of bozne againe noz new created with the spirite, but that sensuall men as those that be carnal & concencious, be not mete
for the perfite doctrine of spirituall re-uelacions, and then by that place Tindals spirituall sould be not spiritual noz mete for the doctrine to receive & gyue out the doctrine of the spirite for ther be no people so carnal & so concenscious as thei.

A the holy goss & spirit of god searcheth & unen the depe thynge of God, because y vnto that holy spirit which is god there is nothyng of God vnknewen: Tyndal taketh that high power vnto his woordes: this full spiritual sozte, saying the spirituall iudgeth all thynge, and his spirit searcheth the depe secretes of God. And with this not satisfed, he amplifeth & enhanceth theyz holy search vpo height, and saith that the spirit of theyz spirituall sozt searche the depe secretes of God so farre, that what so euer god coman- deth them to doo, they neuer leaue searchyng tyll they come at the bottome, the pythe, the quicke, the lyse, the spirite, & mary, and very cause why, and so iudge all thynge. What an heape of hygh vehement woordes hath Tyndal heare heped by together: who woulde not wene that he were with some holy meditacion carryed by in Ennocke and Helias chayze. B But yet good christen reader, for all his holy tale, remember agayn y frere & the nunne, Luther and his wyfe, Tyndals owne maister and maistres, the chyeffe head and authour of his hygh spiritual sayth. For Luther ye wote well (yf Tyndal and his felowes be spirituall and selectes) muste as theyz syffe authour of theyz newe spirituall sect, be nedes one of the very chiefe. Let not therfoze Tyndal (good reader) with his gaye glozyous woordes carry you so fast and so far away, but that ye remember to pul him backe, by the sleue a litle, and aske hym whyther his owne hygh spirituall doctor mayster Martine Luther hymself, beyng specially bozne agayne and newe created of the spirit, whom god in many places of holy scripture hath commaunded to kepe his bowe made of chastitye, when he then so farre contrary ther vnto toke out of religiõ a spouse of Christ, wedded her hymself in reproche of wedlocke, called her his wyfe, and made her his harlot, and in double despite of marriage and religion both, liueth with her openly and lyeth with her nightlye, in shamefull incest and abhominable bycherie: dothe he the whyle after Tyndals hygh woordes searche the depe secretes, and neuer leaue searchyng tyll he come to the bottome, the pythe, the quicke, the lyse, the spirite, the mary, and the very cause of that commaundement why, & so iudgeth all thynge: Thus good reders examine hym, and then shal ye perceiue howe fondly such an hygh pure spiritual proces, accordeth w such a bale soule fleshly liuing. But Tyndall hath an hope that whyle he painteth his prologe with suche gay colours of spirituall vertue: there can no man in the meane while remeber and consider what vngracious fruit theyz deceitfull doctrine and fals faith byngeth forth. And therfoze to carpe the reader farther of, from the remembrance thereof, he letteth gooe by theyz filthy lechery and holily speaketh of loue.

¶ Tyndall.

¶ Take an example in the great commaundement, loue god with all thynge heart, the spirituall searcheth the cause and looketh on the benefites of god, and so conceiueth loue in his heart.

¶ Moore.

¶ In this example of the great commaundement of louyng of god, there can lacke no causes, but without any farre searche there offer themselves ynowe at hande, except men wilfully wyl forget them. But yet albeit that in many thinges a manne may peradventure well & with fruite ensearche the cause of Gods commaundementes, yet may the spirit of a manne that were as spirituall as Tyndall is, or Luther eyther, and take freere Huskyn to them, go sometyme to farre in the searchyng of y depe secretes of God, and wade so farre therein, that he shal fynde these woordes of holy scripture true. He that is the searcher of the maiestye shalbe oppressed of the glozpe, and he shal fynde y depe secretes of god so depe, that the secrete bottome will not be founde out for hym, and specially in that thynge in which Tyndal and his felowes be, as I shall hereafter shewe you most presumptuouslye bulie, that is in goddes synall electes and predestinates, whereof saynt Poule cryeth hymself, o altitudo diuinarum sapientie & scientie dei. Roman. the heygth and depenes of the ryches of the wysedome and science of god. And as for that that Tyndall sayth, that whatsoeuer god commaundeth the spirituall manne to do, he neuer leaue searchyng tyll he come at the bottome, the pythe, the quicke, the lyse, the spirite, the mary, & the very cause why, and iudgeth all thinges: I say as I said before it may peradventure in some thynge doe well to consider the causes of gods commaundement so it be done moderatly and with reuerence. But manye suche spirituall parsones as Tyndall is and Luther, and

aa. i. freere

¶ The spirit of me may wade so far in gods secretes. Prouerb. 25.

Reg. 16.
Eue. 31

A frere Huskyn, so he wotr to reasō and searche the cause of goddes commaundementes with themselfe as kyng Saule did, oꝛ betwene the deuill and them selfe as our mother Eue did, that they fall vpon fallacies and false causes, whereby lyke as Saule was deceiued in sayng of the beastes foꝛ sacrifice, which bestes god had precisely commaunded hym to destroye, and Eue was so begyled that she thought she might wel eate the apple which God had precisely commaunded her to foꝛbeare: so dothe I saye too, these menne that are in this newe fashid sp̄rituall, the deuill they euill sp̄iryte and themselfe with their incessaunt searche fynde out false causes, whereof they take occasion to bꝛeake the commaundementes of God, whiche commaundementes oꝛther good selye simple soules without any searche obserue. As foꝛ ensample, loe where as God hath in holy scripture euidently commaunded, ꝑ who so make a vowe shall perfourme and kepe it, as is wꝛitten by the holye Psalmist. Vowe ye and pay your vowes to our lord, and where as our blessed Ladye thought her selfe bounden thereto, and all the holye saines, since Chrystes dayes vnto Tindals time, haue without any variaunce wꝛitten and affꝛmed thesame, and not onelye they but also all Chrysten people bothe good and badde, haue this. xv. C. yere abhoꝛred as an abhominable monker, and accompted it in commen talkig foꝛ suche a pꝛodigious cryme that ever monke oꝛ frere should wedde an nunne, as they thought should neuer happen in Chrystendome, and therfoꝛe haue alwai fessed that Antechrist hold be boꝛne betwene a frere and a nunne: these newe sp̄iritual men haue nowe, Luther, Tindall, and frere Huskyn and the deuyl together, so long ensearched the cause of this commaundement of God, by which every man is commaunded to kepe hys vowe, that they haue with long searche founden out at last, ꝑ monkes, freers, and nunnes, bee not bounden by that commaundement at all, but maye foꝛ all theyꝝ vowe lawfully runne out of religion and lye together when they lyst, and call theyꝝ splthly lecherie good and lawfull wedlocke. And thus loe good reder, these newe sp̄iritual men with theyꝝ depe searche interpretate and expoũd holy scripture, and fynde out therein suche godlye vertues as this is which h̄ olde holy doctors coulde neuer fynde therein foꝛ lack of grace by likelyhod, foꝛ we see wel they Psal. 75.

Ecclesi. 5.
Esa. 19.
Jonas. 1.
Now and pay your vowes.

lacked no witte and had as muche learning as these men haue and ten tymes moꝛe too, and did their diligēce too, but they were as it seemeth but natural onely, not boꝛne agayne noꝛ created of newe with the spirit of God as Luther is and Tyndall and frere Huskyn and hys fellows.

Take ensauple saith Tindal in h̄ gret commaundement, loue god with al thine heart, the sp̄iritual searcheth the cause & loketh on the benefites of god, and so conceiueh loue in his heart.

In these wordes I laye no fault. But all be it a man myght assigne other causes of our loue to warde God the Tindal doth, as foꝛ ensample his own excellent nature and goodnes of it selfe, woꝛthy to be loued, lauded, and honoured of vs, though we should if it were possible receiue to our selfe no benefite at his hand at all: yet I very well allowe the cause ꝑ Tyndall alledged, that is to wit h̄ consideration of the great benefites of god, and it is a cause of loue in dede bothe reasonable of it self, & also by many a good & vertuous man alledged and considered before. But yet me thynketh that this consideration of loue affꝛmed by Tyndal, dothe confounde bothe Tindal and Luther and al their whole sect, in that they holde that it is not lawfull to loue and serue God neither foꝛ auoiding of pain, noꝛ foꝛ obtēing of reward, calling this maner of loue and seruice seruile bonde and mercenary. This is theyꝝ commē opinion, and Tyndall hath it often as wel in this boke as in diuers other. But nowe remember good reader that Tyndal sayth here the contrary which I am glad to heare him saye. Foꝛ I am better content that he say sometyme well then alwaye naught. And here he sayth right wel that the respect of goddes benefites is a cause of our loue towarde god, and surely so is it in dede. foꝛ although the very good and gret excellent nature of god be woꝛthy to be loued of vs & wooꝛshipped and serued too, foꝛ the souerayn and surmountyng goodnesse of it selfe, though we should our selfe take no maner of benefite thereby: yet may we well haue mo causes of loue, honour, and seruice ioynd therunto. Yet am I not sure whither Tindal wyl saye that I do him wrong in that I ioyne seruice with loue, where he speaketh not of seruice but of loue only. But I haue bene bold to ioyne our loue & seruice towarde god together, because I verely thynk ꝑ Tindal will him

Beware of this opinion!

selfe

A selfe graunt vs, & for whatsoeuer cause it is lawfull for vs to loue god, for & self same cause it is lawfull for vs to serue God. But Tyndal agreeth that we may loue hym for his benefites, wherof it foloweth except he say that we maye loue for some cause, for whiche it is not lawfull to serue hym: els I saye muste Tyndall nedes graunt that for goddes benefites it is lawfull for vs to serue him.

Now if Tyndall graunt vs that conclusion, we wil then wade with hym a litle further, and toyne therunto that yf it be lawfull for vs to serue God for his benefites, whiche we haue receiued: it is also lawfull for vs to serue hym for his benefites which we loke & hope to receiue. And surely as the respecte of his benefites which we haue receiued is a good cause of loue: so is the reliefe of his poyntes and hope of his benefites to come, a good and a great cause of loue towarde hym.

Then if we may serue God for his benefites to come, it seemeth no dout but that we maye serue hym for to geat heauen, whiche is of al benefites the greatest. At thys poynte wyll Tyndal happely sticke with me, and he wyll saye styfly & sayth we maye vse and serue god therewith, to the entente therewith to geat heauen, for saith his felowes and he affirme to bee & thing which onely dothe iustify vs. But then they say playnelpe that if we serue God with any other good woork, fasting, prayer, or almesdeede, to the entente that we maye therewith please God the better or the rather come to heauen: thys seruice is vnlawful, displeasent to god, and playne vnfaithfulnesse, for asmuch as we shal as they saye be saued onely by Chrystes bloude and by our bestet in his poyntes of the same, and therefore they call it plaine ydolatry to serue god with any good woorkes for heauen, or to the entente that we might please God & better thereby. For that thyng they saye wer as much as to make our self Chryst, and to say that we wold be our own sauours by our owne woorkes, and not Chryste by the woork of his passion.

In thys poynte they stycke styckely, and when they bee answered that all though we serue god with good woorkes wroughte wyth hys graciously helpe, to the entente to please hym the better thereby, as hym selfe hath in manye places of holpe scripture commaunded vs, and hope also that suche good woorkes shal the rather helpe vs to heauen, and that we shal in heauen be rewarded for them and for the respecte of goddes commaundement, and for this entent also we dooe them as Chryst hath also geuen vs good occasion, where he sayth y who so geue so muche as a draughte of colde water, shall not lese his rewarde, and where he byddeth vs geue vnto the pooze to the entent that they may receiue vs into the eternal tabernacles, & where he sheweth that at the daye of dome men shall haue heauen for their charitable almesdeedes done here in earth: nowe when we tell them thus, and that we doe neuer & lesse knowledge and confesse therewith that we neither doe nor canne doe any good woork without the speciall grace and helpe of god, and that our dedes be commonly so defectyue that though good dedes well done be rewardable, yet euery man may fynd in himselfe great cause to mistrust his owne: and that we tell the also that at the best that the best man may do, is yet no moze than his duty for euery man is of his duty bounden to labour for heauen, and to serue & please god as well and as muche as he maye, & notwithstanding that we also tell them that the best woork that any man woorketh with gods helpe and grace, is not yet rewardable with heauen of the nature or goodnesse of the woork it selfe, al though he suffred euery daye in a longe lyfe a double martyrdome accordyng to the woordes of saint Poule, the passions of this world be not woorthie the glorye & is to come that shall be reueled and rewarded vnto vs, and notwithstanding that we tell them too, that al the heavenly rewarde of mans good woorkes cometh onely of gods owne liberal goodnesse, in that it hath pleased his high bounty to geue so great a riche price for so pooze & simple wares as are al mennes woorkes, and albeit that we tel them also that god would not rewarde our woorkes in such wyse, were it not for the shedyng of hys sonnes bloud, and so we finally referre al the thanke and rewarde of oure good woorkes, bothe y beginning, & progresse, and the ende, effectually to God and the merites of Chrystes passion, when we tel Tyndal and Luther al thys, yet fare they as though they heard vs not, & styll they syng vs on theyr olde song that it is ydolatrye to serue God with anye good woorkes, to the entente the better to please god thereby, & the rather to come to heauen thereby, & y we maye not without synne for any helpe to heauenward, serue god with any good woork sauynge only faith.

Two good causes of loue towards god

Note how fondly they speake.

A Yet whē we aske them whither we may not lawfullye for the same entente serue God with hope too: to y^e thyng they care not to graunt, but then they confounde the termes of faith and hope, so as I nei- ther woote howe nor thentself neyther.

Then if we aske them farther whyther it be not lawfull to serue God with charitie too (whiche now they leaue and sal all to lusty loue) with entent to geat hea- uen the rather: to y^e they let not to graūt also, but they say the cause is for y^e sayth the saye hath alwaye charitie therewith.

1. Cor. 13. 13.
Iacobi. 2.

B But albeit that in that poynte their as- firmacion is false, as by reason & plaine scripture hath bene often proued vnto them: that is ynough to me y^e they graūt that a man may lawfully loue God and serue him with charity to thentent to be the rather saued and come to heaue ther- by. For nowe semeth me that yf we lawfully may (as Tyndall wyll graunt we maye) serue God with the vertues of faith, and hope and charitie, or of anye one of them, with respect vnto gods be- nefites receiued and also to come, and to thentent thereby the rather to bee saued and come to heauen, we may then law- fully with like respect, purpose, & entent

C serue God w^{ith} any other vertue y^e procea- deth of faith, hope, & charitie, or of anye suche one of them w^{ith} which it is lawfull for vs for suche respect, entēt, & purpose, to serue god: then wyll not Tyndall deny but that prayer, fasting, almoſedebe, and continence and clenness of bodye, penaunce, trouble of the mynde, with sufferance of tribulacion or affliction of the fleſhe wyll yngly taken, with ma- ny other outwarde and inwarde wo- rkes, may procede of faith, hope and cha- ritie. Wherefore I can not see but that Tyndall as he graunteth here that we maye serue God with loue, entending

D thereby to please hym and bee saued the rather: so muste he nedes graunt and agree that lykeloſe maye we with lyke entente and purpose serue w^{ith} al other wo- rkes aboue remembred, proceeding of a faithfull wo- rkyng charitie, wherof he and all hys sonde felowes in euerye place holde hitherto the contrary.

And thus haue I nowe playnelye de- duced vpon Tyndals owne woordes the full confuſion of hys owne common conclusion, so many tymes by him and hys felowes objected, and among them all neuer once yet wel proued nor neuer able to bee proued, agaynst the profite of good mens chryſt wo- rkes, for chryſt be they: praers, their fasting, and they: almoſedebe, whē they be done in fayth, hope, and charitie, & in the state of grace.

¶ Tyndall

And whē he is comāded to obaye the powers & rulers of y^e world, he loketh on y^e benefites which god sheweth y^e world throughe the, & therefore doth it gladly.

¶ More.

In this obedyence Tyndall is yet contente to haue a respecte to the bene- fites that God wo- rkethe and sheweth the wo- rld throughe the powers and rulers of the wo- rld, and putteth that for eyther the onely or the chiefe cause of his obe- dience, as he putteth it for the onely or chiefe cause of gods commaundement. In which kynd of obedyence semeth not the greatest vertue, when a man obeyeth onely for his owne aduantage, but the very chryſten obedyence is to obaye spe- cially for that god so commādeth, and not so to searche and limite the cause of goddes commaundement, as he maye thereby take hymselfe and geue to other an easy bolde occasion to disobay, resist, and rebell agaynst their heades and ru- lers, pretending y^e thei be not profitable.

This thyng meaneth Tyndall as it appeareth by his wo- rdes here in y^e cause of his obedyence, to the powers and ru- lers of the wo- rld, and as it appeareth in diuers other places of his wo- rkes and Luther his maisters too. But God all though he wyll that the gouer- nours and rulers of the wo- rld be good and profitable to the people, yet will he not that the people shall measure the duetye of they- obedyence by the onely rule and measure of they- owne profite and com- moditie, but that they shall obaye they- prynces and other rulers & gouernours, because that they be they- gouernours & rulers, and because that God hath so comāded. For if they may measure their obedyence by the measure of they- owne profite as Tyndal telleth vs: they that looke seke occasion of sedicion, and they- of do theyself also more harme in one day then should their ruler in many yeares, all wer he right vnprofitable in dede, as appeared by the bylandische Lutheranes in Almayn, whiche measuring they- obedyence by Tyndals rule geuen them before by Tyndales spayſer, became all vnrewo- lye and dyso- beyed and rebel- led agaynst they- rulers, and thereby dyso- beyed Goddes commaundement, and brought thereby the vengeaunce of God

A God vpon theyr owne heades, to the slaughte of aboue foure scoze thousand of them in one sommer, and the remenat the woꝛse entreated euer since, and that hath made Luther and Tyndal a litle to retreat since and set a newe glose ther to that wyll but shrewdly serue them as I shal shew you when I come to y place hereafter in his boke.

¶ Tyndall.

And when he is comanded to loue his neighbour as himself, he searcheth y his neighbour is created of God, and bought with Christes bloud & so foꝛth.

¶ More.

Bloe this is very louingly spoken, and he saith very well, and I praye God that he be one of those spirituals that so doth, but surely manye places in euerye boke y he writeth seme clerely to declare y he hath another maner of spirite then suche a spirite of loue. And yet were it hard except y gods comandemēt geue vs y warning, els wil it be somewhat hard foꝛ any man vpon the other two causes, by any search to perceiue that he wer in reason bound to loue another as well as hymselfe though thei maye serue to loue him right well.

¶ Tyndall.

And therfoꝛe he loueth him out of his heart. And if he be euil, foꝛbeareth hym & with all loue and pacience draweth him to good as elder bꝛethꝛen waite on y yonger and serue them and suffer them, and whē thei wyl not come they speake faire and flatter and geue some gaye thyng & promise saye, and so drawe them and smyte thei not, but if thei may in no wise be holpe, referre the punnishment to the father and mother, and so foꝛth. And by these iudgeth he all other lawes of God, and vnderstand y true vse & meaning of the, & by these vnderstandeth he in y lawes of mā which are right & which tyranny.

¶ More.

Wlsey Tyndal and his spiritual mayer this maner of loue, this foꝛbearyng and this maner of pacyence toward the Pope and the clergye, and toward pꝛinces and other tempoꝛall rulers: we see perdye thꝛough al theyꝛ bookes in what lowly louing fashon thei serue and suffer them, and how saye they speake and howe pleasauntly they flatter all holpe catholike christen people sayyng onelye theyꝛ owne sect, w as venemous woꝛdes and as popson speche as the deuyl canne deusse them, with all the meanes they maye to soue deuision and discencion & set the people in sedicion, and vnder colour of true sayth to byꝛng them in heresies and destroy bothe body and soule.

But Tyndall would now y we should foꝛ the while foꝛgeat all that he and his maister writeth els where, and hymselfe in many places after in this same boke, and that we should only marke these holy louyng woꝛdes that he writeth here i his present pꝛologue, in whiche he sayth that they whiche he spiritual doe neuer smyte theyꝛ yonger bꝛethꝛen, that is to saye, suche as be not in sayth and vertue growen by as they be, noꝛ will not with them come foꝛwarde therein, but be euil and wyll be no better, but the spirituals as theyꝛ elder bꝛethꝛen dothe flatter the and promise saye, and geue them gaye thynges, and so draweth them foꝛwarde in grace, and finally if that wil not help them, then the spiritual elder bꝛother referreth theyꝛ punnishment to the father & the mother, that is as he meaneth to almightye god, foꝛ yf he mente vnto theyꝛ rulers so it is alreadye, foꝛ none other hath authozitie to coꝛrect and punishe. And his mynde he hath declared in that behalfe in sondꝛy places, that no manne should in any wise pursue and punishe any man specially foꝛ anye heresy, foꝛ he that pursueth any man is no spirituall man. I let passe here that after this wat the woꝛld, albeit that it be badde inough alreadye, woulde yet ware then muche woꝛse, and I passe ouer also that as wel al wyse menne as all good menne, and holy scripture also it self, is open & plain to the contrary. And I wyll foꝛ y whyle no moꝛe but aske of Tyndall whither he accompt the Pope & the clergye & the tempoꝛal pꝛinces foꝛ men boꝛne agayn and renewed with the spirite of God, & ther by spirituall oꝛ not. If he reckon the foꝛ suche: then by his owne rule they canne and do very well iudge all thyng, and so should he then think that y thinges that they do be wel done, foꝛ he sayth hymselfe that y spirituals do searche the bottome of gods commaundementes and fulfyll them gladly.

Howe yf he saye that they bee not the spirituals, but suche as Luther is, and freere Huskyn and hymselfe, and suche other as so searche the causes that they care not as Tyndall sayth after, whyther the pꝛieste saye Masse in his towne oꝛ in hys Cope, and wyll as soone gape foꝛ sande as holpe salte, and hadde as

Out of his heart not in his heart.

And this is well true.

A leefe be smered with vnhalowed butter, as annoynted with charmed oyle, except mē cā tel thē the causes whiche they say that no man cā, and therfoze they mocke and iesse therat, now yf this theyz sozte be as Wyndal sayth the spirytual & ther- by the elder bʒethzen: then wyll we saye to Wyndal and ask him why doe not you Wyndall and your spirytual felowes ac- cordyng to your own woʒdes here, loue out of your hertes ȳ Pope, ȳ Cardinals, the clergy, the p̄inces, the people, and so foʒth, being as your yonger bʒethzē not

B yet boʒne agayne, and why doe you not foʒbeare them with all loue & paciēce and so foʒth, and wayt on them & serue them and suffer them and so foʒth, and when they wyl not with you come foʒth why do you not thē speake them fayze & flatter them and p̄omise them fayze & so foʒth, and so dʒaue them foʒth & so foʒth. And yf that foʒ all thys they wyl not come foʒth: why doe you not then refer the punysshment to the father and mother, and smite them not, but cōtrary to your own woʒdes vse at your yonger bʒethzē to laugh them to scoʒne, to mock, to telt to check, to chide, to bʒawle, and ribaul-

C dously to raile, calling thē apyssh, pluish, popyssh, iuglers, theues, murtherers, bloudsuppers, toʒmētours, & traitours, Wylates, Cayphaas, Herodes, Annaas and Antechyrites, Judaas, hypochyrites, motenmongers, p̄yapistles, ydolaters, whoʒemassers, and sodomites, abhomi- nable, thamelesse, Marke madde, & faith- lesse beastes, hangemē, martyʒquellers, and Chʒyſt killers, serpētes, scoʒpions, dʒemers, and very deuils, and finallye with suche benemous woʒdes and other malicious wayes the woʒst that the de- uill and you deuise together, busily put foʒth your payne to lowe debate, dys- senccion, scyssmes, strife, and sedicion, &

D cause your spirytual people, that is to wytte the elder bʒethzen boʒne agayn of the sp̄ypte, to ryse and rebell agaynste your yonger bʒethzen, but natural yet and not boʒne agayn, and the tone part to smite and kyl the tother by thousandes on a day, as ye haue done in Almayne, p̄ouiding alwai that your selves ȳ chief captaynes and authours of such sedicyō and rebellous bloudshed, gate by vpon some hyl in the meane while, and stand and loke vpon sure and safe a syde halfe out of al gunshot, and come not at hand strokes in no wise, but serue foʒ trumpe- tours to the blast of your woʒdes & vn- gracious wytynges to kindle thē & call vpon and set them all a woʒke, and yf it E walke on your syde then to gawde and gloʒy, and if it go against you and your part go to wʒacke, then synke away fro the fielde, and make as ye came not ther noʒ neuer intended harme noʒ ment anſ such matter, oʒ as your maister dyd in Almayne to put your self out of suspici- on, crie to the contrary part to kil them downe hand synothe, whom your owne woʒdes rayled vp and synnefully sette a woʒk. And lo thus hath Wyndal cōting- ly declared the great cōmaundement of loue, and by himself and his felowes as ye see so louingly put in bʒe, that they would help the tother part to al the mis- chyeſ they might, and would that on the tother syde whatsoener they do themself F be it neuer so mischieuous, no mā shold once chyde them, noʒ geue soule woʒdes but in their deuilysh dedes foʒbeate theyll and tatter them, and take them then as yonger bʒethzen litle babes vntaughte, and geue them fayze woʒdes and p̄etye proper geare, ratilles and cokbelles and gay golden thone, and if the wantons wil not learne yet, but byte and scratch their felowes, beate not the babes yet in no wise, but go and tel their mother and so foʒth. And when Wyndall hath thus conningly declared the great commaū- dement of loue, and hath so spirytuallye set it out to ȳ thew: thē cōcludeth he wel and woʒshipfully that by this commaū- dement of loue in suche a wyse way vnderstanden, his spirytual foʒt iudgeth at the lawes of god, and vnderstand ȳ true vse of them, and by the same in likewyse vnderstande thē al the lawes of manne whiche are right, and whiche tyrannye. Foʒ by this they vnderstande that foʒ ȳ loue that they beate to theyz owne wyl, euery gloſe that thē geue themselfe is ȳ right meaning of the woʒde of god, and al that al other holy men haue wyttē is but fantasies and false. And in mennes law to let them beat other men foʒ sayng G truth, wer wel oʒdeined and ryght, but any man to chide once any of them foʒ a hundred heresies, that were vtter woʒdg and no lawoful law but plain tyrannye.

C Tindall.

If god should commaund hym to dʒyng no wyne as he commaunded in the olde testamēt, that ȳ p̄yettes should not whē they ministred in ȳ temple and foʒbade diuers meates: the spirytual because he knoweth that man is toʒd ouer all other creatures, & thē his seruantes made to H be Wyndal taketh gret pleasure in often bring- ing in these woʒdes. And so foʒth.

The bene- mous woʒdes of the Luthe- ranes.

A shall interpret hymselfe dyscharged of the commaundement, and shall dzyneke wyne & shall bzeake his fast at his pleasure, or if he forbeare wyne or kepe y fast he shall at the vttermoost kepe it but for a countenaunce, and as they wypte themselves in auoydyng the flaundyng of suche as haue a weake conscience, and wene themselves bounden to the keeping thereof. And therfore when they haue kept the fast in syght, they shal not force to bzeake all those fastes pziully, where the weake consciences of other synple soules are absente & no body by the, but B suche as are all spiritual and haue a conscience strong ynough to bzeake y strong fast ypon good friday without grudge of conscience at all. And afterwarde lytle and lytle they shall when they be suffred, amend also and make strong in the lord the weake consciences of their sick bzythen, and make them bzeake all the fastyng daies too, with laude and thank geuen to the Lord that by his elect preachers in these latter dayes of this blinde worlde, that could not on fastyng dayes fynde their meate, hath now illumined theyr eyes & geue the lyghte, by whiche they haue founden the way into the ehzyten liberty of eating, dzyning, and honest lykynge lechery, from the bondage & thraldom of all fastyng dayes, & al pzeffessed chastitie.

For to this end we see that theyr spiritual doctryne hath all ready brought it in Saxony, for there is now the lent all turned into throstide. And there it well appeareth all though it wer true y Tindal saith, that fastyng were of god ordainyd for none other cause, but onely to tame the fleshe: yet was it nede for the church to doe as it hath done by the spyryte of God, ordayne and appoynte certayne common fastyng dayes in which the people should faste together. For els yf there were no suche, the mooste part of y people which now in the comon fastes do tame the fleshe together by the commaundement and laudable custome of the church of God, would fynde verve fewe dayes therfore of their own mind, & many not one thzough the whole yere as ye nowe see in Saxony, where they y were wont to fast many, faste nowe neuer a one.

And surely yf fastyng were not profitable, done of anye other deuocion but only serued for taming of the fleshe, and then the custome taken away of commo fastyng dayes, in which folke fast together in obedience of the commaudemēt, and those common dayes taken awaye, folke wer onely left to their owne libertie and pziuate secrete cōscience, to chose their fastyng dayes their selves, not of any other deuocion but onely for taming of their fleshe, when themselfe lele it beynne to boyle: then many wedded men shoulde nede fewe fastyng daies to their payne, haupng theyr remedy so pleasant and so present alway ready at hande, & then would many an honest maiden bee ashamed to fast any daye at all, lesse she should seme thereby to gene young men warning that she wer ware warne and byd them if they wil speede, speake nowe.

But Tindall with hys spiritual felowes are fallen into this folie by the loking of their owne luste, in samoz wher of they sinnefully study to fynd out false gloses, to bee open glottons without reproche, and also with the prayse of suche people as theyr false doctryne hath corrupted and brought in a wzong beleefe, contrary to all doctrine of al the old holy doctours, and against all holye scripture, euen the very ghospell it selfe and y very wordes of Chzist, by which not onely all chzisten people hytherto but also y Jewes haue frō y begynnyng ben taught to beleue, that mans fastyng hath bene pleasaunt to God for other causes then Tindal would haue it seme, y searcheth and seketh only the meanes to bzeake it.

Tindall and his maister be wonte to crye out vpon the Pope and vpon all the clergy, for that they medle philosophy with the thynges of God, whiche is a thyng that maye in place bee verve well done, sythe the wyldome of philosophy all that we fynde true therein, is y wyldome geuen of God, and maye well doo seruaice to his other gistes of higher wyldome then y is. But Tindal here in this place as it semeth, doth leane vnto y old natural philosophers all together. For as for abstinence to tame the fleshe from intemperance and soule lusses also, this was a thyng y manye philosophyers byd bothe teache and vse. But as for fastyng that is another thyng whiche God hath alwayes among his faithfull people had obserued and kepte, not onely for y purpose, but also for a kinde of paine, affliction, and punishmēt of the flesh for their synnes, and to put vs in remembraunce that we bee nowe in the vale of teares and not in the byll of ioy, sauyng for the comfort of hope.

And albeit that Tindall bee lothe to heare Philosophye may be well medled with the thynges of god.

whi fastinges are obserued.

A hears thereof, because he would not y any mā shold do true penance w putting hymself to any pain for his own sinnes, yet would god the contrary. And as he wyll that men for theyr synnes shoulde be soze in their heartes, so would he that for the same cause the sozowe of theyr heartes shoulde redounde into theyr bodies, and that we shoulde for the pꝛouocacion of gods mercy, humble oure selfe befoze him, and not onely pꝛaye for sozogenenes but also put our bodies to pain and affliction of our owne selfe, & thereby to shew how beautifull we take it that we have offended him.

15 And to the intent that we shoulde well knowe that fastyng is not onely for taming of the fleshe, but also for payne to be taken for our synnes, was pleasaunt vnto him: he taught his people by his pꝛophetes that they shoulde fast, and appointed them certain daies. It appeareth also that fastyng was and is pleasaunt vnto god, when menne doe for deuocion to God not onely forbeare their pleasure, but also part of their necessari sustenance in occupying the time of vsual feeding of the fleshe about the plenteous nozishing and spirituall pampering of the soule.

C Also vnto the obtaining of great spirituall giftes of god and high reuelacions, howe speciall a thyng fastyng is, bothe our sauour declared hymselfe in the ghospel of Mathew, where he sayeth that that kynde of deuils whiche he dyd cast out of the chylde, is not cast out but by pꝛayer and fastyng.

16 And of all these thynges we haue in holy saintes liues so many examplis, that it were ouer long to rehearse them. But for as much as we wel y findal maketh but mockes of al suche matters, and all theyr holpe reuelacions & miracles taketh but for trybles: we shal sende hym to looke better vpon y good bookes whiche hymselfe hath euill and of euill purpose translated, the boke of I meane of the holy scripture it selfe. For therein shall he see that fastyng serueth not onely to tame the fleshe, but for al these good vbes also that we haue spoken of befoze, and yet for many other moze. And there shall he speciallly see the thyng that he is mosse lothe to let you see, that fastyng and other bodily affliction eyther take by commaundement of god & his church, or willingly take of our own god mind done for our synnes, done in true faith & deuocion with purpose of amendement, is one of the very speciall thynges y obteine remission of the sinne, release of y more pain, with getting greater grace & increas of goddes fauour, which thyng is the same that he and his selowes dooe so soze oppugne, that the whole church of Christ, pꝛiestes and lay men both, call satisfaccion, not meaning that we can doe penance ynough for our synnes, nor that we could doe any thyng thereof at all without helpe of grace, nor that all y we can doe, could be worth a ste to heauenwarde without Christes passio, but that with helpe of grace and merites of Christes passion, our good woꝛkes well wrought, helpe to geat remysion & purchase vs pardon and release of payne, & may well be done for that intent, and be by god ordayned to serue vs to y intent, and for that cause be they by the church called satisfaccion, for the deuoure that we shoulde do to punishe at the ful our offences our selfe, that god thereby the rather moued with mercy, should wdraw his great heauy punishment, whiche els he shal cause to be done vnto vs himself, and not so soze yf we iudge and amende our faultes oure selfe, accoꝛdyng to the woꝛdes of the blessed apostle to y Corin. thies: If we iudged our selves, we shoulde not be iudged of our Loꝛde. And surely yf we iudge our selfe cruelly, we shall bee content to punishe our selfe.

17 And that fastyng is one of the good woꝛkes that helde other good & greate godlye purpose serueth for satisfaccio of sinne, and pꝛocuryng of remissio, grace, and pardone, and that it serueth not onely for the taming of the fleshe as findal here would haue it seme: ye shall see to manifesly pꝛoued by many playne places in euery part of scripture. First the fastes that Moyses fasted fyꝛst for the lawe, and after for the synne of the people and the syn of Aaron also. Were these fastes for nothyng but for to tame his fleshe? It is in y. xxi. chapter of y third boke of Kinges, when Achab had heard these woꝛdes, he tare his garmentes & put on his body a shert of here, he fasted & slept in a sacke, and wente hanging his head lowe downe, and our loꝛde said to Heli as Thesbites: hast y not sene how Achab hath hūbled hi befoze me? And therefore because he hath hūbled hys self for mi sake I will bying no euill in, during his lyfe. Doth it not manifesly appere by these woꝛdes y hig Achab fasted not for taming of his fleshe to kepe it fro wildnes, but he fasted for y self same cause for whiche he ware here & slept in a sacke, y is to wꝛe to Satisfaccion.

Note.

1. Corin. ii.

Exod. 24. 18.
Deut. 9.

Achab faste.

Note.

Leuit. 27.
3achs. 2.

1. Th. 17.

A to humble hymself afoze the face of god, and to doe penauance in puntyng hym self fo: hys sin to moue thereby almyghty god to mercye, and to the withdrauynge of his hygh punysshment, which els he feared wold fall bpō hys head, which punysshmente God at the respecte of the bynges humble penauance and payne of fastyng and other affliction wyllyngly taken by hymself, dyd mercifullye withdraue from hym, so that in al hys daies he suffred hym to fele no part thereof.

W And so maie ye see this place of scripture euident and playn against Tyndal and that very repentaunce requyret of the repentaunt parson, not on ly taming of the fleshe against the synne imminent or to come, but also punysshmente by fastyng and other affliction fo: the synne already done.

And nowe Christ hath to chryste men promysed of our synnes fo: geuenes, and of our pain releace by vertue of his pain, but this meaneth he to them that set not their owne synnes at so lyghte after his great kyndnes shewed, but y they: own selfe shewe by they: own wilful punysshment woorthy to suffer payne also the self therfoze, and then his payne hath geuen they: payn the lyfe that maketh it quick and auaylable, not entending yet that hymself so should take paine y the sinners themselfe should sinne at their pleasure and bee saued all with ease, as Tyndall and Luther would make vs wene. fo: that were the waye to make men wanton and ware very bolde in synne.

Furthermoze in the fyrst boke of Esdras and the viii. chapter it is wyrtten thus in the person of the people: we haue fasted and prayed to god fo: this, that is to witte fo: helpe against our enemyes, & it is comen prosperously to passe. Ye may here clerely see this pestilente opinion of Tyndal with fewe wordes confuted. fo: this fast was not fo: taming of the fleshe, but fo: auoydng of they: perill.

Agayne in the seconde boke of Esdras and the first chapter thus said Beremias: when I had heard suche tydynges, that is to wytte howe the walles of Hierusalem wer thowen downe, the pates burnte, and the chyldren of Israell in great affliction and misery: I sat down and wept and mourned many dayes: I fasted also and prayed afoze the face of the God of heauen.

Lo thys fast was not fo: to tame the fleshe, fo: the manne was in heauynesse farre from suche wanton thynges: but he fasted as he wepte and mourned, to moue god to mercy.

Also the greate prieste of God Elyachym sayeth in the fourth of Iudytte: knowe ye that oure Lorde shall heare your prayers yf ye contynen in fasting and praying in the sighte of him. I suppose no manne is of so simple wytte and vnderstanding, but he maye at the bare rehearsall of thys byese terte well perceiue that Elyachym dyd not esteme fastyng as Tyndall dothe, nother toke it not onely fo: a taminge of the fleshe, but fo: a meane also to purchase grace with remission and pardon, and also to obtayne ayde and helpe of God in that great necessitie.

Is not the fourth of Hester also clene contrari to the doctrine of these deuillish preachers of fleshy libertie: Go and assemble (sayeth that good Quene) all the Jewes that thou findest in Susan, and pray ye fo: me. Eate ye not, neither drinke not in thre dayes and thre nightes. And I likewise wyl fast with my maydens. Would she y thei should fo: beare meat and drynke to the entent that by they: fastig thei might tame her fleshe: nay noz fo: the taming of their owne. But that by their deuout fasting and her maidens and her owne, they might prouoke oure Lorde to pitie them and preserue them from that imminent peryl that thei wer then all in.

What sayth Tobye: Prayer (saith he) toynded with fasting is good. He sayeth not this onely fo: yong lussy folk fo: taming of their fleshe in auoydng of intemperance, fo: good chrysten fasting goeth sometyme farre aboue the natural temperance, but he teacheth all menne that maye withoute harme, to toyne with prayer the payne of fasting, as a thyng pleasaunt vnto god in suche wyse as the prayer is, and it is a secreete inwarde effectual prayer whē the paine of all the body repenting and punysshing the sinne, cryeth to God fo: mercy wyth voice of the mouth. In the xxxiii. chapter of Ecclesiasticus it is wyrtten: The man that fasteth fo: his synnes & agayne committeth the selfe same synnes, what auayleth hym this humillitie. Whereby it is wel vnderstanden that he wiche fasteth and amendeth hymselfe, his fast auayleth & is profitable. And wherfoze: not only fo: taming of his fleshe, fo: that may be tame inough and yet the manne had inough, but it auayleth fo: remission

A of sinne and for merite in heauen. For as holy saint Austyn sayth: To say that the fast of a Christen man shall haue no rewarde in heauen, is not the oppinion of a true christen mā, but of an heretike: The prophete Joel in the second chapter: And therfore nowe sayth the Worde, turne to me with all your hert in fastig, weppng, and waylyng. Ceare youre hartes and not your garmentes, and so forth.

Loe here the prophete exhorteth to fasting, as he dothe to hearty mourning and weping, not for a countenance of sorrow, but to be sorrowful & to take pain in dede, not in theyr clothes where they fele it not, but in theyr bodie & inwardlye in theyr hartes where they feele it thoroughly, so that they may thereby not onely tame theyr fleshe, but also tourne agayn to god, that he may take pitie vpon them and turne agayn to them. Read we not in the thirde chapter of the prophete Jonas, that God seyng the Ninuities chastise and punish themself with fasting and other afflictions voluntarily done vnto themselfe, did mercifully take quite away the great and grieuous punishment that was at hand ordained by himself for theyr synnes and offences? wherfore dyd they fast? for to tame theyr fleshe as Tyndal saith: Nay, they fasted and did penance for their synnes, & therewith purchased pardon whiche Tyndal wyl not perceiue.

I could here alledge vnto you christe readers other tertes out of the holy prophetes and other places of scripture, as the first chapter of Joel, the .iiij. of Daniel, the .xxvii. of Hieremy, the .xx. of Iudicum, with an hundred places moe very strong for vs in this matter of fastig, but these fewe maye seme to many, for a thyng so manifest and clere. How bee it I wyl alledge vnto Tyndal the wordes of our sautour himself written in .v. .xxvii. of Mathew: where he saith: This kynde of deuils is not caste out but by prayer & fastyng. The holy Euangelist Luke in the .xiiii. chapter of the Apostles actes, writeth thus: when they had ordained them priestes in euerye churche and had prayed and fasted, they comended the to the Lord in whom they bekeued.

Here may ye clerely see good christen reader, that the holy and blessed apostle Paule with many other mo, dyd not fast in this place for the subduyng of his flesch and taming of bodily lusses, for they fasted here for other folke, & is to wytte for his priestes to whō they had geuen holy orders, & for the people whō they had committed vnto their charge, & god for theyr deuoute prayers & fasting shoulde geue increase of his grace & fauor among them.

Finally what wyl Tyndal saye to his wordes that are wyttē in the .vi. of Mathew, and spoken by the mouth of our sauiour Iesu Christ, where he sayth: whē ye fast make not your selfe saddelike hypocrites, for they waste out theyr faces to the entent it might bee perceiued that they fast. For sooth I saye vnto you they haue theyr rewarde already. But when thou fastest annoynt thy head and wash thy face, that it appeare not vnto men & thou fastest, but vnto thy father that seeth in secreete. And thi father that seeth in secreete, shall rewarde thee openly.

Loe doth not our lord here promise to rewarde all them & for no desyre of mans prayse or pryce of vain gloze, but of mere humilitie and true repentance of hearte punish theyr body with fasting. Which one place being so playne open and manifest for the merit of fasting though it might haue bene moze then sufficient to confounde Tyndal and his mayster Luther w all their scholers: yet haue I bene therein the longer and haue spoken of this matter somewhat & moze at large, for his manifestation of their great blindness, and as it semeth malice to mennes soule, and for the comfote of them that hitherto haue had the mynde to punish the fleshe with fastyng, that they do not hereafter as vnchristes haue in Almayn done already, leaue of their deuocion to God for the soude babbling of such sensual heretikes. For if Tyndal wil say & yet all thys was nothyng but to tame the flesh, that the menne might pray the moze quietly without rebellious motions of the flesh, whatsoeuer he shal saye therein consider the places & his wordes together, & ye shal find al his pcellē ther in a fayre tale of a Tub. For albeit that Christe fasted fourtye dayes and after hungered, yet whyther Moyles hungered in hys fourtye dayes or not we be not verye sure. And it semeth wel that he dydde, for he woulde not of likelihood haue tolde it for anye greate thyng that he fasted for the synne of Aaron, and also for the sinne of the peopie, so straightlye fourtye dayes, that in the whyle he neyther ate nor dranke, if he neuer had in the whyle been neyther an hungered nor a thurstie. How bee it yf Tyndal will bypunge all these fastes in questyon: yet

A yet of the Penitentes and þ other aboue rehearsed there is no maner of dout but that they fasted in hūger & thirst. And it wer in dede a mad thing to thynk ȳ whē they went about to punish theyr synnes and humble themselfe befoze the face of God with fasting. thei fasted but til thei were a hungred and then gate them to breakfast. If he wpll say that the payne of the fastyng was onely to tame theyr flethe that they should not synne, he can not so say, for it appeareth that they dyd it willingly as well for theyr synnes befoze passed as for divers other causes. If he wpll say that there was difference betwene the repenting in the olde law and the new, and that there was cause why they should punish theyr synnes themselfe and not we, because Chryste hath now done penaunce for our synnes and had not at that tyme so done for theyrs: it wpll not serue hym, bothe because dyvers of the authorities for fastyng be alledged in the new law, and also because the Jewes had the profit of Chrystes passion by theyr sayth that it was to come & should be done, as we haue by the sayth that it is passed and all ready done, and theyr repentaunce and oure repentaunce were lyke, sauing our priuilege of moze haboundaunt grace and pardon by the sacrament of penaunce whiche Tyndal goeth about to destroye. If he wpll saye that the fastyng serueth but to kepe the mynde calme and quiet in prayer, from all mocions of fleshly lustes þels might trouble the mynde: to this I say that the hunger it selfe may trouble the mynde & make it lesse quiete, then yf the flesh wer in temperate rest without it. And ouer this his aunswere in that point wpll not serue, sythe it appeareth well by the circumstances in many of the places befoze touched, that many whiche fasted were not in suche ease of heart nor luste of body, that theyr prayers were at that time likely to be letted with voluptuose waton mindes. Wherefoze let Tyndall saye what he wil: ye shal find for trouth that besides the taming of the bodye, fasting and our pain taken therein pleaseth god done with deuocion, & serueth vs for obtaing many & great giftes of grace.

Ray saith Tyndal in his boke of obedience as for pain taking. god is no tyrant & therfoze reioyseth not in our pain, but pitieth vs, & as it were mourneth w̄ vs, & would we should haue none, sauing ȳ like a good surgeon he putteth paine of tribulacion vnto the sozes of our sinne, because the synne cannot other wyse be rubbed out of the flethe and cured.

We say not neyther that god reioyseth in our pain, as a tyrant, albeit that Luther & Tyndall would haue vs take hym for such one as had moze tyrannous delite in our pain, then euer had any tyrant, when they by the taking away of mānes free wil, would make vs wene that god alone worketh all our synne, and then damneth his creatures in perpetual tormentes for his owne dede. But we say ȳ god reioyseth and delyteth in the lone of mannes heart, when he findeth it suche as the man inwardly deliteth, and in his heart outwardly to let ȳ loue of his hert so rebounde in to the body, that he gladly by fastyng and other afflictio putteth the body to paine for gods sake, and yet thynketh for all that, that in compariso of his duetye all that is muche lesse then right nought. We say also that God reioyseth and deliteth in iustice, and for ȳ cause he deliteth to see a man so delite in the same, & to take his sin so sorowfully that he is content of himself by fasting & other afflictio willyngly to put himself to payn therfoze. And I say that if God had not this delite, which is not a tyrannous but a good and godly delyte, elles would he put vnto man no pain for syn at all. For it is plain false that god doth it for necessitie of dzying the sinne out of the flethe as Tyndal sayth he doth, because ȳ otherwise it canot be cured. For it is questionlesse ȳ God can otherwyle dzyue the sin out of the flethe, & by other meanes cure it if it so pleased hym, and so would he sauing for his godly delyte in iustice, which he loueth to see man follow by fasting and other penaunce, and which delite of folowynge gods pleasure therein, Tyndal in maner by withdrawing of penāce cleane goeth about to destroy.

Howe where Tyndal as a spirituall enscarcher of the cause of euery comādement of God, did in reproving the superstitious maner of them, that wout such a depe spirituall searche dooe kepe gods commandement straightly: bying in the examles of Dauid and his company, which for necessitie dyd eate of the offered halowed bread where of by ȳ law he should not, & of Moyses also leauyng the chylzen contrary to the comādement of god. xl. yere vncircūcised in desert, he endeth that matter w̄ this greate weightie word: These ensamples myght teach vs many thinges if ther wer spirit in vs.

What

Luther taketh away mannes free will.

f

G

H

Q What thynges the euill spirite that inspireth Tyndall, teacheth hym I canot tel. But of any good spyrite he learneth no farther in these enlamples, then that in necessitie Moyses the leder of the people vnder god, and being also the prieste of God, dispensed with the people in deserte in delaying the circumcisiō for pe-ryll of sodayne trauayle thereupon, tyl they should come where they might rest vpon it. And that Achimeleche y priest in likewise for necessitie dispensed with Dauid and his seruauntes, y they might eate of offred halowed bread, and yet w great difficultie, but if they wer cleane from anye late commixcion and carnal knowledge of their wiues. And of that poynt myght Tyndall yf he had a good spirite in him, learne at the least wyse one thyng agaynste the boldnesse of hys wedded harlottes, monkes, and freers, that from their filthy lechery go so boldly not to the halowed bread, but to y ho-dye of God in forme of bread. But Tindals spirit teacheth hym to be bold therin, and to bid euery frere boldlye breake his bowe and the commaundemente wout any necessitie or dispensacion at al, saying that freers may no moze lyue wout nunnes, the Dauid might without meate.

Tindall.

And lykewyse of the holy dave, he knoweth that the dave is seruauit vnto man, and therfore when he findeth that it is done because he should not be let fro hearing y word of god, he obeyeth gladly, and yet not so superstitiously, that he would not help his neighbour on the holy dave and let the sermon alone for sne day, or that he woulde not worke on the holy dave nede requirung it, at such time as men be not wont to be at church.

More.

Here Tyndal teacheth vs high spiritual doctrine, y christen mē should not be to superstitiously holy on y holy day, wenyng that they might doe no bodilye worke for necessitie. But the people for ought that I see, know that wel inough and moze too. But yet to make them the moze bold: he teacheth them that the holy day is seruauit vnto manne, that he may therfore be bolde vpo the holy day as vpon his owne seruauit to vse it as it please him. But yet al beit y Christ said vnto y Jewes y the sone of mā is master & lord eue ouer the sabooth day, to vse it as himselfe list, which neuer list to vse it but to the best: yet can I not well see y Tyndall is in suche wyse matter & lord of the sabooth dave, noz no man els, that he may vse it as his man, though it was of god institate for man, and not manne for it, that is to wit for the spirituall benefitte and profite of man as our sautoz saith also himselfe. But yet he calleth it not seruauit vnto man as Tindal calleth it. For the scripture sayth that God hath sanctified the sabooth dave vnto himselfe. And that was the cause why y Christ thewed vnto the Jewes that himselfe was Lord of the sabooth daie, because he woult that they should thereby knowe y he was very god, sith that they hadde learned by scripture that the sab-ooth dave was sanctified onely to god himself for mannes profite and no man lord therof but onely God. A gouernoz of people is made for the people, and not the people for the gouernour, and yet is there no man among the people wonte to call the gouernour his man, but himselfe rather the gouernours man. The beti manhode of our sautoz himself was to some purpose ordeined for mankynd, as the incarnation of his Godhead was ordayned for man, but yet vseth no wise man to call Christ his seruauit, all be it himselfe of his mekenesse dyd moze then serue vs. But we wyl not much styck to Tyndall for a worde to what wretted a wyse, so y we wyl he met no harm ther-by. But I fers me moze of his meaning lest he wold byng holy daves and wo-king daies al in one case. For as for do-yng our neighbour good, and also the working for our owne necessitie, the ne-cessitie may be suche that the church denyeth it not. But whoso do iteprere his necessitie ouer large, or differte vnto the holy day the worldlye workes whych he might and shold haue done vpon y wo-kyng dave befoze, or may as well doo it after, and yet wyl worke it on the holy dave, and thereby wyl for his parte byng it in custome to withdrow the reuerens fro the holy dave and make wo-kyng day therof: this manne hath in my mynde much nede to consider Salphat, which for lyke vlyng of y holy day, gathering wood on y holy day y he myght haue done on the working dave, was by Goddes owne indgement stoned vnto to death.

And I like Tindall in this mater the worle, both for his woordes in his other bokes, & for y castō of his sect now grow-en in Germany, & also for y only cause y he

Mat. 23

1. Cor. 13

1.

1. Cor. 13

More this example,

A he fyndeth out here for the keepyng of the holy dape, of whiche he putteth no moe but the only hearing of the word of god, so that by the cause which he findeth out a chryssen man that wer epyther in desert or among infidels where he could heare no preaching, should haue no moze respect vnto Chrysmasse day or Ester day, or Whitsontide, to kepe them for holpe dayes hymself, then the worst day in the yere, or then woulde a Turke hymselfe. And this is his hygh spiritual doctrine concerning the holy dape.

¶ Tindall.

B And so throught oute al lawes, & euen likewise in al ceremonies & sacramentes he searceheth the significacions and wyl not serue h̄ visible thynges. It is as god to him ȳ the priest say masse in his gown as in his other apparel, if thei teach him not somwhat, and that his soule be edyfyed thereby. And as sone wyl he gape while thou puttess sande as holy salt in his mouth, yf thou shewe him no reason therof, he had as leyffe bee smered wyth vnhaloweb butter, as anoynted w̄ charmed oile, if his soule be not taught to vnderstande somwhat therby and so forth.

¶

¶ Moore.

Loe good chryssen reader, this holpe spiritual man, at last I wyll wel woude somwhat shewe hymselfe, what ghostly spirite inspireth hym. For here you se for all his holy salutation at the begynnyng, with gay wordes of grace & light and faith and seruente loue: he bloweth and blaffereth out at last his abhominable blasphemie against the blessed sacramentes of Chryst, and lyke the devils ape maketh mockes and motoes at the holie ceremonies, that the spirite of god hath so many hundzed yeres taught his holy catholike church. And here perceiue

D per the false wylines of the deuill in vttering of his dregges & poisoned draught. He couereth his cuppe a litle and shadoweth the colour of his enuenemed wine, that it may be dronken doune gredely ere the peryll be perceiued. For he maketh here as though he founde no fault, but in that the significacions of the sacramentes bee not opened and declared vnto the people, as though yf that were done he were content, and that he mocketh not the sacramentes but the mynysters that openeth not the betokenynges thereof. But I shall shal first shewe you that he playeth the devils disoz euen in this point, al though he ment no farther and then shal I farther shewe you what mischief he meaneth moze, and proue it you by expresse wordes of his owne.

First I saye it is a lewde and a knauishe raylyng vpon the sacramentes of our sauour Chryste, to lyken and compare them in any maner wyse vnto such scozeful thynges, as the annoyntyng with holy oyle vnto butter smeryng, w̄ other suche lyke knauishe toyes whiche no wretche woude doe, but such as hath the very name of the holpe sacramentes in hated and despise. For we where he sayth that his holy spiritual sozte wyl alway so villanously effeme the sacramentes, but if men tell them the reasons and betokenynges of them to the edyfyng of their soules: it will be great busyness and muche a doe to edifye and build vpon the soules of suche a sozte, whiche the deuill hath by h̄ blast of his mouth thzowen doune so depe and frushed al to fitters. But I pray god to whom nothyng is impossible, to builde them once again vpon the rocke of his faith, from which thei shew themself so farre fallen down ȳ they be full vnlikely to ryse. For truly if they shoude therupon they heartes woude abhorre to bittere suche frantique fantasies. For as touchyng the significacions and betokenynges of the blessed sacramentes, the lacke of knoweledge wherof Tindal woude make seme a sufficient cause of his villanous blasphemie: all good people that haue the vse of reason and come to these sacramentes with good deuocion, be taught and do thinke and conceiue in their heartes, that God was incarnate and borne god and man for our saluacion, and suffred his passyon, and dyed for our redempcion, and h̄ we wer redemed to heaue with his blessed bloude, and that withoute hym we shoude neuer haue bene saued, but hadde bitterly lost heauen by the syn of Adam, and for this cause we call him our sauour & belieue that he hath promysed vs ȳ if we be chryssened and kepe his holy commaundementes, and for ȳ breaking be sozy and turne againe by penaunce, God wyl bynng vs to heauen that he hath promysed vs and boughte vs too. And they belieue that he hath ordapned here holpe sacramentes, whiche he wyl that we shall receyue with reuerence, and that euery man with those sensible sacramentes except the fault bee in himself, receiueh some inward grace & aide of god by h̄ merites of Chrystes passio & by his holpe promise & ordinaunce,