

A And therfore it semeth right expediente that the sayde lawe bee repelled. And in likewyse it wer god to repell all suche lawes spirituall, as be made contrarie to the kynges lawes, and the custome of the realm. And if it be sayd, that it were god also, that such statutes and lawes, as be made and vsed by the tempoꝝal power to the grieffe of the people, wer also refourmed, and that if I were indifferent, I would make some mocion so to haue it. And so it semeth mayster Doze dweth partely moue, that I ought to haue done, and to haue found as well defaulte in the tempoꝝal lawe as in the spirituall lawe: Howe be it, because he wolde beare no blame of the tempoꝝal lawe in that mocion, it seemeth that he somewhat mitigateth his sentence therein and sayth, that if I do so, and that thā I handle them, that is to say, the tempoꝝal lawes & finde defaultes at them, as truly as I doe at these, y is to say, at the spirituall lawes: y then I shoulde make two lyes for one, & yet as I suppose, I haue assigned some defaultes in the spirituall law, which maister Doze cannot tell how they should be excused.

C As to hys repelling, I see as I haue sayd, no substance in his wordes. For we repell them as farre as I see we can, when we kepe them not, but make oure own lawes to y contrary. And therfore as farre as I see, all y he speketh of these repellinges, saue onely for setting furth of his diuision, is els but a very vaine tale.

But now where he saith that I wolde haue him and seme to moue him, to find faultes in the tempoꝝal lawe to: I wot nere whether hys wordes haue herein moze falsehed or moze folye, but surelye they haue both twayn, & eyther the one or the tother double.

D For first euerye man may see by hys own wordes euē here, that I moue hym not to vse as for indifferent, to find faultes in the tempoꝝal lawes, when himself here sheweth that I say that if he so dyd, he should make double lyes. This sheweth that he vseth in thys saying, playne and open vntrowth. And syth hys owne vntrowth appereth vpon hys own shewing, thys sheweth also, that he vseth open folye.

And where he sayth that he hath assigned some defaultes in y spirituall lawes, which I cannot tell how they should be excused: I answer him agayn, that vnto all lawes, or all matters that he lyke to babble of, am I not bound to medle w, but of these spirituall lawes y wer made for y repressing of heresies, with whiche our tempoꝝal lawes are also conformable & concurrant with whiche thys god wise man for the ease of heretikes, hath nowe founden such faultes as a wise mā may be ashamed to speake of, I haue clearly declared that they nede not to be excused but that for the synding of such faultes, his folye to be muche accused. This haue I proued so playne, that he can synd no gret cause of gloꝝy when he looketh back vpon it.

But nowe to thentent you may, good readers see, that eyther thys man is not so symple in hymself as he semeth, or els that some wyse thewes shamefullye doe deceyue hym: I beseeche you consider a little either the folye or the crafte that the man vseth here.

He hath brought you furth wordes of myne which I speke he saith of y lawes, wher as of trowth I speake them not of y lawes at all, as your selfe shall well see. For though he dyssemble the place because he wolde not haue you reade it: yet haue I soughte it out for you in the 99. leafe of myne Apologye, and there lo these are my wordes.

And thys pacysyer aggriueeth (as muche as in hym lyeth) the cleargye of England, for vse of the lawes not made by themself, but be common lawes of alchrystendome. If he wyll saye that he blameth but theyr abuses thereof, the trowth apereth in some place other wyse in hys booke. And yet syth he proueth y poynt but by a some say, he myght with thesame figure laye lyke faultes in the tempoꝝaltie concernynge the lawes of thys realme, and prouue it in lyke wyse with a great some saye to. And therein he sheweth himself not indifferent when he byngeth in the tone, and leaucth the tother oute.

And on the tother syde, if he byng in the tother to, than shal he make .ij. faultes for one. For if he handle thē as truly as he hadleth these, than shal he make two lyes for one.

Loe good readers, consider here I beseeche you the maner of thys god man. To the fyrste piece of these wordes of myne, in which case is also the law that we be now in hand withall, inquisitionis, wherewith he would in hys booke of diuision, aggriue the cleargye of thys realme which neuer made the law: he answereth not in al his booke one word, and yet

As yet in his suche manner of aggreuyng he bseth a very sinnefull, and in his not answering, a very shamefull waye.

Then in the remenaunt you see god readers your selfe, that I speake not of the lawes. For whan I saye thus, if he will saye that he blameth but their abuses therof: yet sith he proueth that poynt but by a Some say, he might by the same figure laye like faultes in the tempoꝛallie too, concerning the lawes of this realme: is it not here playne that I lay blame in him, for his belyng of the minystrers of the spirituall lawes vnder a fygure of some say, as though they abused the spirituall lawes in misse handelyng of heretikes wherof I speake moꝛe after. And I saye that by a lyke figure of some say, he might dyspame all the tempoꝛall minystrers too, and byng them in grudge & obloquyte of the people with lyke lyes of abusyng the tempoꝛall lawes too.

Howe consider god readers, epyther how fallly this honest mā hath hymself, or els how foolisshly he hath suffered false thyrewes, to make him turne and change the sentence of my woꝛdes fro the men to the lawes, to byng in hys matters vpon, and saye that I moue hym to fynde faultes in the tempoꝛall lawes, & putte them in pꝛynt abꝛode as he doeth in the tother, wheras you playnly see I speake not of the lawes but of the minystrers, nor yet aduise him to vse suche fashyon with the tempoꝛall minystrers neither, lest he make two lyes for one.

Is not nowe this change of my sentence that he maketh here, a very shameles dealyng, either of hymself or of some thyrewde counsaile of his.

And now knitterh he to this handling the remenant of the sayd. xiiij. Chapter, & sheweth that he speaketh first of the spirituallie, because the causes of the diuision speciallye be growen by them, and layeth forth a sort of griefes, some parte very trybles, and some part remedied before his boke of diuision made, and some part very folyshe, and some part for all his some sayes vndoubtedlye very false.

He hath there two leaues in the ende of that Chapter, whiche any wyse man that readeth them, shal I suppose, iudge a very dreaming tale. And therein it seemeth that as he hath begonned with the spirituall lawes, so he wil after procede in the tempoꝛalle lawes too. And sayne would that man make me so fonde as to be hys selfe therein, and saith if I know any such made, as the parliament hadde none authoritie to make, or wherenpon the people haue iust cause to complayn: it wer well done that I should shew the. And so he thinketh verelye that charitie should compell me to dwe, seeing that I am he sayth, learned in the lawes of the realme.

Verely if I knew any such: yet would I not folowe neyther thys god mannes holy exhortacion, nor his godly saumple neither, to do in the tone as he hath done in the tother, but if I lyked hys doynge a little better than I dwe.

And if I be learned in the tempoꝛall lawes, the lesse will I folowe his counsaile. For the better that I wer learned in them, the lesse would I wene it wolde become me, to pꝛynt and putte abꝛode among the people, a laundcrous boke of them to shame them.

And vnto this poynt god readers, I haue answered and shewed my mynde in myne Apologye before, whereto thys mā geueth a deafe eare alway. And here vpon a sought occasion with a fond wyly change of my woꝛdes, exhorteth me to the thyng to which I made aunswere already. And what I before sayd therein, that he dyssembleth, and sayeth not one woꝛde therto. But in myne Apologye, god readers, the. 159. leafe these were in thys poynt my woꝛdes.

Thys other murmurours & grudges that he sayth he cannot now rehearse, he reherceth after many of the in his other chapters, which I wil passe ouer vntouchted, both for that the moze part of them be such as enerye wyse man will, I suppose, aunswer them hymselfe in the reading, and satisfie hys owne mind without any nede of mine helpe therein, and for that some thinges are ther also therein, that are very well sayd, and some also, that be they god or badde, I purpose not to meddle muche withall, as are the thinges that touch anye lawes or statutes already made, be they of the church or of the realme, defend them I am content to dwe, if I thynke them good. But on the tother syde if I thinke the naught albeit that in place and time conuenient I would geue myne aduice & counsaile to the change, yet to putte out boke in wytyng abꝛode among the people agaynst them, that would I neither dwe my self, nor in the so doyng commend anye man that doeth. For if the lawe were such as were so farre agaynst the law of God, & it wer not possible to stand with mānes saluacion, than in that case the secrete aduise

A aduise and counsaill may become every man, but the open reprooche and redargucio therof may not in my mynde wel become those that are no more spiritual thā I. And sure if hys lawes may be kept & obserued wout peril of soule, though the chaunge might be to the better: yet out of time and place conueniēt to put the defautes of the lawes abrode among the people in wꝛiting, and without any suerty of the chaunge giue the peple occasion to haue the lawes in derisyon, vnder whych they liue namely syth hee that so shall vse to dooe, may sometime mistake the matter & thinke the thing not good wherof the chaunge would be woꝛse: that way will I not as thus aduised neither vse my selfe noꝛ aduise no frende of mine to dooe. And therefore I will as I say leaue some thinges of hys booke vntouched, whither he say wel or euill. †

Here you se good readers mine answer to this point, concernyng the finding of fautes and putting them abrode in pꝛinte: which answer he dissembleth & againe pꝛouoketh mee to the same, as though he had neuer herd it, which answer I will therfoꝛe be had as repeted in every place where he pꝛouoketh mee hereafter to the same point. And thus you see good readers, that whereas hee hath not in any one chapyter of hys, brought foꝛth any reasoꝛ yet: yet hath he brought foꝛth least in thys his. xvij. in which he boꝛseth most. Foꝛ by this hath he plainly declared, that he neyther vnderstandeth the lawe inquisitionis, that he alledgeth, noꝛ so much as the poꝛe sūme called Summa roselli: neither. Foꝛ that good manne that made it, vndoubtedly neuer ment of such inquisicions as ours are, of which maner hee had happely neuer knowen none. And as foꝛ the lawe, the very first woꝛdes therof to him that vnderstandeth them and considereth them well, sufficiently do declare, that hys lawe foꝛbiddeh lay men to meddle with such maner knowledge of heresy, as should be a let and impedement to the ordinaꝛies, or other the spiritual inquisitours & not such knowledge as we take by our inquisicions, that onely serue to helpe hys tother foꝛth & bying the matter to theyꝛ handes.

How the lawe foꝛbiddeh lay me to meddle with the knowledge of heresy.

And therefore sith I see well, that this mā in the laten lawes & Summes, hath so little vnderstanding: I shall be the moꝛe content in his lawes and hys Summes, so much the lesse to dispute or meddle with hym.

The. xix. chapyter.

In this. xix. chapyter he declareth what hee meaneith by confederacies of the spiritualtye, and saith he meaneith confederacies wherby spirituall men pꝛetende to maintaine some such lawes of the churche, and some such constitucions pꝛouincial, as are against hys kinges lawes and the olde customes of the realme, & putteth foꝛ a sūple, hys putting of pꝛiestes to answer afoꝛe tempoꝛail iudges, & the statute made de Silua cedua, and the statute of Portuaries.

As foꝛ conuenting of pꝛiestes befoꝛe secular iudges, trowth it is hys one tyme thocasion of a sermon made the mater come in communicacion befoꝛe hys kinges byghnesse. But neither any times since noꝛ many yeres afoꝛe, I neuer herd that there was any busynesse about it, And yet was that matter ceascd longe befoꝛe any woꝛde sprange of this great generall deuision, hys booke maketh as though there were such, in a maner generall thꝛough the whole realme.

And diuerse statutes haue there since ben made, concerning the same point. And many pꝛiestes conuented as they were wont to be befoꝛe, and no busines made by the spirituality therfoꝛe that I here of, noꝛ I trowe him selfe neither.

And in likewise men cut down their woodes euery yere, in one place and other of the realme, & eyther is there not asked the tithes against the statute, or if some person would with good wil gete it, and therfoꝛe aske it, he getteth it not yet in dede.

Foꝛ where he sayeth that if I would remembꝛe my selfe well howe often the constitucion pꝛouincial, made against the statute de Silua cedua, hath bene put in execucion of late dayes, to the grieſe of many lay men: I would not haue saied so generally that there is not anye one constitucion pꝛouincial that he spekeith of to any mannes grieſe or grudge put in execucion in the time of any of hys pꝛelates that are now liuyng, & affyꝛmeth that the same constitucion hath of late in the tyme of diuerse of the same pꝛelates that now be, bene put in execucion, to the grieſe and grudge of many persons within thys realme.

First as touching myne owne remēbe-rance: in good faith I canot remēbere. And as to his owne remembzaunce, by which he affirmeth it to haue bene done so lately, to the grudge and grieffe of so many: he shall perdon me though I be-lieue hym not tyll hee pzooue it, or at the least wyse name them that haue had the winning, and them also that haue bozn the losse, so that I may my selfe pzooue whyther it be true or not. For except he doe the tone, els haue I good cause in hys meane while, in this pointe to gyue no great credence to him.

For syth I can scantely belyue that vpon the persons bare woꝝd, for allega-cion of the constitucion pzoouincial, his parishe would let him haue it. And if there happed any man that would: yet am I sure they were so few, that it wozd so double foly to lay that for any cause of deuilsyon, which were done both but by a few, and also not wythout the parties wyll, & rather of his owne pryuate deuotion, than for any fere of compulsion.

Nowe if the person woulde take it of his perisshen by force: I see the come experience therein such: that I dare boldly say the whole parishe would not suffre hym. And yet if it were taken in dedde: neyther should the persone enioyc the pzoofite, nor the perisshen beare the losse but should at the kynges commen law recouer a ryght large amendes.

For wel ye wote his dammages should be tared him, not by. xii. prestes, but by.
xii. tempoꝝ all men, & his coalles by the kinges iuges & are no prestes neither.

Now if this man will say, that many of the persons haue in the time of hys prelates that now be liuing, or that were lyuing at the time that hymselfe wote those woꝝdes, recouered in any of hys spiritual courtes, the tithes of such woꝝdes, against the statute, by force of that pzouinciall constitucion: I wyl see this mā pzooue it ere I beleue him in it. For the daunger of that suit may be peraduen-ture moze, than I suppose the persō wil put in peryll for his tithes. And also the parisshon may soone stoppe the suit in hys beginning by the kinges prohibicion, wherby the kinges iudges shall see why-ther hys person sue for such tithes or not, & wil not therein suffer him to pzoocede.

And therfoze till thys good mā make mee better pzooues of this matter than hys owne bare saieng: he giueth me no cause agaynst so many lettes to the co-trary, therein to belieue his woꝝde. But I durst well warrant it, if he coe ones to the naming of the parties, so that the specialties of hys matters may be sought out & made appere: you shall surely find it vntue.

Now than to maintayne withal his great woꝝd of confederacies he byngeth foꝝth that some prestes say still, that those tithes and moꝝtuaries also, for al the statutes be their dueties still, & that they which pay them not be accursed. I haue espied this good mā is a mā of sadnes, & no gret gamener. For if he were he would neuer be angry for an angry woꝝde, spoken by a man that is on the lesyng syde. Whis is an olde curtelye at the cardes perdy, to let the leser haue hys woꝝdes. And in good faith in thys matter I here no suche talking at all. And verely this deuice of hys to put this for a cause of deuilsyon, is in my minde a very childlike thing. But than goeth he ferther hys prestes make party-cular confederacies, to maintain obites and prestes wages, and to haue moze at berialles than they haue bene wont to haue, or els to shew themself not content, that is to say to aske moze tan they can geate, & because they can not geate it, shew themselfe not content, that is to witte lowze and loke angerly, and say they be not pleased. We not thele hyghe matters and meete for that heighnouse name of confederacyes.

And yet goeth he ferther wth an other heighnouse confederacy, hys prestes if a preste haue a busines to do in some coutreis: other prestes will as it is sayd so confeder with him at arbytrementes & other metinges, or els make them, such frendes pzoouill, that the tother partye though he be of right good substaunce, and haue also good right, yet shall hee sometime haue much a dooe to obtaine it.

Is not here good readers a wonderful heighnouse woꝝke, and wel woꝝthy the name of confederacies of the spyrytualty, that but in some countreis, nor there neither of any certaintie, but as some say, some prestes in the businesse of a nother preste, wil, and yet but som-tyme neither at arbytrementes confeder with their good woꝝde to helpe for-the their selouwe, or elles to make hym frendes: Wea and then what a mischief he sheweth that ensucth thereupon.

The tother party hath he sayeth much a doe to obtayne his right and yet that but sometime neyther.

But

Q But as for lese hys right by theyr meanes, he sayeth not that any man doth.

We not these heighnouse confederacies, and thinges mete for thys man to make a booke of deuision for: And yet as though he had very wel aquite himselfe: he knitteth it by wth these woordes.

And these be some of the confederacies of priestes that I ment of, and not the gatheryng together of the clergy at the conuocacions.

In good sayth I saue not howe hee

Would meane any other thing, nor that neyther well. For the name of confederacies taken to an euill part as this mā raketh it, doth signify a meting and gatheryng together, and a deternynacyō of certayne euill folke, conspiring together aboute an euill thyng to bee done, wyth a couenant and promise bi eche of them made vnto scher, eche to stande with other therein. Now whereas at conuocacions good men come together to doe good, and therfore he could not cal theim confederacies as he now sayth he ment not to do: yet I doubted somewhat whither he so ment or not, because the conuocacions be at the least wise comē assemblies together, whereof he myght hap I thought to gyue a good thyng an euill name. But these matters that hee now speaketh of, I could not ymagyne that ever he ment to call them confederacies, wherein he neyther seeth assemblies, nor can assigne and proue any conspyrac<sup>y</sup> & mutuall promise, in assisting eche other about the procurement of any thyng at all good or badde. For where as he sayth that these be some of the confederacies that he ment: I am sure no man doubteth but that these bee eyther al the confederacies that he fyndeth, or els at the least wise the greatest. And they are those that he calleth here particuler confederacies, so childishe that in good faich I much meruaile, that his hearte could serue him for very shame to speke of them. And then the tother that he taketh for generall confederacies, he neyther seeth nor assigneth so much as any assembly about the, or promise or abetment to procure and pursue them. And therfore though soe priestes would here or there speake of them as their own affeccion ledeth them: this is farre fro hys nature and name of confederacy.

And yet whē he hath altogether done while he proueth nothing at the bertermost (though all that he sayeth were as true as it is not) but that they would payne haue the tithe of tymber skil, and that they would faine haue the moztuaries skil, and that some would payne haue greater wages, and some would payne haue moze money at y<sup>e</sup> verryalles then for all theire faine willing they cā geate, when they would only sayn haue it, and yet in dede gete nought of it, nor other folke nothing lese: to make nowe so great a matter of thys and call it an hyghnouse name of confederacies, is as me semeth somewhat lyke to hym, that would needes haue an accion agaynst his neyghbour because his neighbours horse stode & loked ouer his hedge. For he sayd that he saw by hys countenance that he would haue eaten hys graspe if hee could haue gotten to it. For as for that, that the hedge letted hym, was lyttle thanke to him, for hys wyll was neuer the lesse. And thus hys. xii. chap. you see good readers how little reason is in it.

His. xx. chapter begynninge in the. lxxvi. leafe hath so lyttle effecte and substance in it, and so faintly defendeth his sozmare matter which it pretendeth to defend, y<sup>e</sup> I purpose to make no long woike aboute it.

For if you rede first his woordes as they lye in mine Apology fo. 159. in y<sup>e</sup> second side beginning at these woordes. ¶ And here mee thinketh I might say: ¶ Ye shall there good readers find, that I rehearse those woordes of his euen whole, with those woordes in them, which he would in the beginning of this his. xx. chapter, make men belieue y<sup>e</sup> I had withdrawn, as though they were woordes of such substantial effect, that I would not haue it appere in my booke that hee had written so pithy help. Afterward in a nother place where they be rehearsed againe fo. 162. the presenter of likelphod lest them out of ouersight and hast. And surely they bee not of so great weight, but y<sup>e</sup> if the authour had himselfe left the out in his booke of deuisyō, it had made lyttle matter. And if he had ouer y<sup>e</sup> left out the whole clause: then had he left in his booke one lie the lesse, and hys booke the better by so much. For wherby proueth he that the spiritual rulers pretēde themselves to be so clene and pure, y<sup>e</sup> there is no defaute in them, but all in y<sup>e</sup> people alone, and in them selfe no maner faute at all?

Q Where herbe he ever any spirituall mā say thys, by the whole spyzualty or by any one man therof?

They confesse themselfe to be men & sinners. And they confesse, and know ledge also, y the very cause of this chiefe mychiese that now begynneth to make deuision, that is to wytte the execrable heresyces, whych mischiefes thys good mannes euill deuises with chaunge of good lawes were lykely to maintaine, if men would folow them: did both begynne, and is also set forth and auanced for ward by those vnglaciose folke that are such among the spyzualty, as Judas was amonge the apostles, & this not in this realme onely, but in other countreys to. As by frere Luther, and priest Pomeranc, Otho the monke, and frere Lambert, frere Huskin, & Swinglius, and here in Englande Lindall, frere Barns George Jay, and some other such, as with the sede of sediciouse heresyce, haue sowen and set forth deuyfyon.

I wo: thy copany.

C Thys thing the spyzualty both knoweth and knowledgeth. And therefore they do not pretend as thys pacifier saith they do, that there hath ben no fauts amōg the but all amonge y people. And therfore this good man where he sayth y I left out thre woordes in y clause of hys (which yet I did put in dede) hyselke had somewhat amended his matter with leaning in of one lye the lesse, if he had left out the whole clause altogether.

D As to that that he sayth I chaunged hys woordes in the ende from these woordes, the light of grace that is spoken of before wyll not appere, into these woordes the lycht of grace that is spoken of before, be with you and euer more amē: therein he sayth very true. For syth hee was fallen into preachyng, I not only in the spyzic place rehearsed hym as he spake himself, but after ward also in the second place I toke the paine for hym to mende hys collacion in that point, and make it ende some what moze like a sermon with a good graciose praiour.

Then goeth he forth, and in the same leafe and the next folowing, hee maketh a suspiciouse matter, and ca not tel what mind I was of, in chaunging his woord spyzual rulers, into thys woorde prelates. But looke good readers vpon the place, and you shall see that I dyd it of good cause. For I do not there say that he sayeth prelates, but I save there that peraduenture he wyll say so.

E And also besides this that ther is no very great dyfference betwene these woordes, the prelates and the spyzual rulers: the chaunge from thys woorde the spyzual rulers into this woorde prelates, semed me y moze mete & moze propoz for the matter that the pacifier speareth in that place, wher he spekethe of authoritie y they pretend, and obedience that they claime.

F Howebeit rather then I woulde gyue any cause of deuyfyon agaynst mee, to hym that bieth to make great deuyfyon vpon small groundes, I shall be content to gyue him hys owne woorde againe. And therfore I pray you good readers euer y of you mend your bookes, & in y stede of prelates in that place, put in spyzual rulers. And when you so haue done, the chaunge shall for the matter not be very great, and yet so much as it shall be, shall moze serue me then hym.

G But yet to make me sorpe, that euer I was so far ouersene, as to take away hys gay golken woorde of spyzual rulers from him, he beginneth as it were with a great thzet and sayth.

H What mayster More meaneth to chaunge these woordes spyzual rulers into prelates, I cannot tel. But now by occasyon of the woordes that mayster More hath spoken, I wyll save fether in the matter then I hadde thoughte to haue done.

How happy was I lo, that I had not the grace to let hys owne woord stande. For now wyll he say farther in y matter then euer he had thought to haue done. And that is (saith he) this.

I That I thinke verely that if so great an ouersight fel into prelates and spyzual rulers, that they woulde take vpon them to preach heresyce, that they woulde that the people shoulde belyeue them therein, and to take it to bec catholyccall that they preached. For who woulde preach any thyng but such as they woulde haue theyze audience belyeue.

Belieue mee good readers, that this man wcneth he sayth well fauoredly in thys point, wherin he taketh such pleasure, that after ward folio. lxxii. he falleth into y same agayn, and sayth thus.

J After More goeth about only to proue, y al my tale is lost, because prelates pretend not to be belieued if they preach heresyce as he taketh it y I shoulde say they doe. And yet I said not so in dede. And if I did say so, I said but truely.

K For

A For if they did preache heresy, it is cer-tayne that they would looke to be belieued as I haue sayd before, ye and if they would preache and say y if they preched heresy, that they would y people should not beleue the: yet if they did after preache heresy in dede, they would loke that the people should beleeue theym. For they would say y they were no heresyas y they preached. For who wil confesse y he preacheth heresy. A

Now good readers here haue I soyned you together thys good mans gaye wozdes in twoo places, wherein I perceyue he pleaseh hymselfe ryght well.
But to thentent that you may see why-ther he haue so good cause as he weneth, consider well hys wozdes and mine before, toher upō he cometh to thys point.
For he maketh as though, I without occasion gyue of hys wozdes, had written that the pzelates pretende not to bee belieued if they would preache heresy.
Wherin whither he say true or not you shall see by hys oluue wozdes, whych are these.

C The lyght of grace wyll not come, as long as the spirituall rulers pretend that their aucthority is so hygh & so immediate of God, y the people are bound to obey them and to accept al that they do and teache, withoute argumētes resistance or grudging. A

Now good readers fyrst consider wel here in these wozdes of hys, what wise-dome the man hath shewed, in makyng such a mumbling of chaunging spyr-tuall rulers into pzelates. For when he sayth here, that the spirituall rulers pretend that they aucthority is so hygh: what doute is there but though he mene other rulers moe beside whom; hee calleth no pzelates, yet hee meaneth pzelates to, ye and pzelates specially to. And then when he sayeth that the pzelates & the other spirituall rulers pretende this or that: may I not wel say that he sayth the pzelates pretende thys: Yes verely that I may. And yet in so chaūging his worde: I chaunge it to his aduantage & not vnto mine, in that I make his odyouse sayeng much lesse, & nothing moze.

H And thus first you see good readers thys mannes much ouer sight in finding of y faute. Now consider serther good reders y he sayth in those wozdes, not y the spirituall rulers, that is to say both the pzelates and all the remanaunt to, pretend their aucthority to bee hygh and so immediately derpyued fro god, that the peple are bounde to obey the in this thing C or that thynge, one, or twaine, or tenne, or twety, but utterly to accept and obey not onely all there teachinges, but als so all there doinges to, and neither argue, respitt, nor grudge at anye maner thynge, that they would eyther teache or dooe.

Thys generall thynge he sayeth. And therfore though I deale as you se so sa-uozably with him in my. xxvij. chapter of myne Apology, as to deuide y mater and aske whither hement it by there whole aucthority or part: I might wel vpon these wozdes of hys haue taken it, F that he had very shamefully belied the,
and had sayd that they had pretended to haue their whole aucthority immediatly of god euer y whit. For if I would so haue sayed, hys general wozdes would well haue warranted myne. Also sith hys sayeng is so general, and extendeth utterly not only to al their teachinges, but also to al their doinges to, and sayth that they pretend, that by goddes immediate ordinaunce the people should accept altogither, both all that euer they say, & al that euer they do: by how many maner thinges might I haue confuted hys sayeng, and haue proued it false?

But yet hys sayeng being such, I toke but one thing, and that was such, as for the matter that we both specially spake of was next at hande. And therefore I said, that they pretend not to haue such an aucthority that men should obey the in all thynge, for they pretende not to haue aucthority to binde men to beleue and obey them, if they would preche heresies. But they plainely pofesse that if they so would men should not beleue the nor obey them therein.

Here you se that where he saith that he ment not y the pzelates would preache heresy: he spekeh al beside the purpose.
For I sayd not that he either so sayed or so ment. But I said and yet say, that in those wozdes he said, y if they would preache heresy, they doe now pretend, y by the aucthority which god hath giue them, the people were then therein bou-den to beleue & obey the. And in his so sayng I ther said & yet say, y he saith very far vntue, & that they pretend it not, but plainly pretend y contrary. And thus in this point y he maketh a mater wout ground or cause, & that himselfe w hys own wozdes gaue me good occasoon to write the thing that I wrote: thys you se good readers proued very plaine.

L. ij. But

¶ What nowe consider his other woordes, wherein he lyketh himself so well, & weneeth that he proueth that the spirituall rulers of the realme pretende, that if they woulde preache heresy, the people were by goddes ordinaunce bounde to helieue and obey them therein, because they woulde than say that it were none heresy. In this poit his reasoning hath I promise you a little moze subtiltie thā substance, and yet but simple subtiltie neither.

¶ First as for hys case, that if al the spirituall rulers would preache heresy: if he had ment of the spirituall rulers of all chrysendome, I would haue admitted hys case none other wyle, but as mē put and admitte a case impossible, to se what might ensue thereon if it were possible, as saynt Paule putteth the case if an angel came from heauen & preached a contrary gospel, yet the same angel should not be believed. But now sith he putteth it but by the spiritual rulers of one realme, I admit the case as possible, but yet as such a case, as I trust in god this good man shall see the skye fall first and catche larkes ere it happen, though it may be lykely inough to happen in some one or twaine, or some few against whom the remanant shal preache and teache the truth.

But now sayth this good mā thus. If it so happened in them all: thā would they al pretend, that by their auctoritie giuen them of god the people were bounden therein to helieue and obey them. For they would than say that their heresies were none heresies.

¶ I am content to graunt him al this, and I aske him now what than? For al thys good readers proueth (you se very well) no moze, but that if that case happened if they also preached, they would than also pretende. But al this proueth neuer a whit, that the spirituall rulers epyther nowe dooe, or at any time haue done, pretended their auctorite such. Nowe consider than for what purpose he speaketh of such pretending. He sayeth (you wote well) they pretending of their auctoritie to be so great, that the people should obey them without argument, grudge, or contradiccion in all if euer they epyther say or do. This he sayeth I say for so lorde a cause of thys deuision, whych hee maketh in hys booke, that he sayeth the light of grace wil not come to ceace it, till they cease so to pretende.

And therefore god readers sith thys is the thing that he sayeth, and the purpose that hee sayeth it for, making it a cause of deuision present: howe can hee mayntaine his sayeng wyth a case sayned, wherby it may be that they wyl so pretende hereafter, wheras euer hither to him selfe sayth not nay, but that they both haue pretended and yet pretend the contrary? Can hee maintaine that the tempoꝛalty is at deuision with the spiritualtie now alreedy, because it may adventure happe here after by a farre sett possibilitie, that they may than, noe man wotteth whan, pretende peraduenture a thing, wherof they presently pretende the contrary, and protest also that if the case shoulde so myschappe hereafter, they desyre nowe for than that no man shoulde therein than helieue them?

Saw you euer good readers any man with such a simple subtiltie, call al hys matter in the dust so shamefully?

Now where he sayth to mayntaine hys matter here withal, that it is not to suppose that spirituall rulers wil pretende that such auctoritie as they haue of the graūt of princes, is immediately of God: I say that therein he sayth trouth, and if I suppose that they wyl not. But yet let him selfe looke wel in his own booke of deuision, and he shal fynde that him selfe sayth the contrary here, of that he now sayth here, and sheweth some thinges which he both sayth that they haue but by the meane of princes and god minde of the people, and yet sayeth also that they pretend to haue the same thinges immediately of God. As for ensample bothe there auctoritye to haue the tenth part for tythe, and the thing whyche they enioy by the name of the liberties of the church, wherby their persons be in many thinges prouiledged in thys realme befoze the person of a lay man. These thinges him selfe saith that they haue but by a means and not immediately of God. And yet he saith in this same. xx. chapt. that the thinges which they pretende to haue immediately of god, & for all that hee sayeth nowe that it is not to suppose that they wil pretend so. And thus you may se good reders, that for the defence of thys place, he is bounde to a shrowde narrow streite, whan to defend one fault he is faine to make twain.

Now wheras he sayth I myght haue satisfied my selfe wel inough, and that the letter of hys woordes were playne: you

You see that in the rehearsing againe of hys owne wordes so. lxxx. he is sayne to suppresse and steale awaie these his owne generall wordes, & all that they doo oꝝ teach, to make hys wordes seme plain.
Foz as you see, they standing still, hys wordes are playne agaynst hym. Foz himselfe now confelleth, they pretende not to doe by auchozite immediate fro god, such thinges as they do by auchoz-rite giuen them by pꝛinces.

But because I would sayne fully satisfy hym: I shall now shew you y with hys new declaring y hys wordes were well ynough, hee hath made his matter out of al measure worse.

Foz nowe rede hys wordes agayne.
so. lxxx. and there you shall see that hee sayeth that hee meaneth onely of suche auchozite as the spirituall rulers pre-tende to haue immediatly of Godde.
And yet after he declareth it ferther and better on the seconde syde of the same leafe in the. xliij. lyne that hee meaneth onely such auchozitype, not as they pre-tende to haue, but as they haue in dede immediatly of god. And to thentet me myght see that he meaneth not of aucthozite falsely pretended, but truly had immediatly of God, he putteth foz the sample their auchozite in ministracion of the sacramentes.

This is his owne expofion of his owne wordes, which he would haue taken foz so platne, that he is angrý with me that I coulde not spye it, and so satisfye my self befoze.

Well goe to now: let vs rehearse hys owne wordes againe as himselfe foz his owne aduantage sol. lxxx. rehearseth them, and let vs plant in hys owne ex-poficion with them, to make hys sentence the moze clere, and than shall wee see to what godd conclusion he bringeth all in coclusion. Foz than cometh his whole tale to thys.

As long as the spirituall rulers wil pretende, y their auchozite is so hygh & so immediatly deriued of god, in suche thinges as they haue theyꝝ auchozitype immediatly of God in dede, (as in the ministracion of the sacramentes & such other thynge like) that the people are bounden to obey them withoute argument oꝝ resistence: so long the lyght of grace wil not appere. ¶

Now good readers here be now hys owne wordes with his owne expoficio therin. And how lyke you them nowe?
Foz now the sentence hath he brought at last woth much worke to none other, ¶ but that y light of grace wil not appere as longe as the spirituall rulers pretend to be obated & not resisted in the ministracion of the sacramentes & such other thinges lyke, because they haue their auchozitype therin immediatly of god in dede. But thā on the other side, whē soeuer they wyl not pretende, their authozitype so high therein, noꝝ so immediatly deriued of God, as to bee obated therin, but wil be content y me grudge & argue and resist them therin, and pulthem from the altar, and suffre them to ministrate no sacramentes noꝝ any such other thinges lyke: than shall by this godd mans new declaracion the light of grace appere by and by. Hath not thys pacifier here good readers, with much labour at last brought thys matter to a wysse conclusion? If he will now go fro thys agayne, and put in hys other generall wordes agayne, which foz hys aduantage he lefte out in that place: than is all gone againe that he goeth about, and all mine aunswere made (as I haue shewed you) good, & all his owne wordes nought. In the leafe also.

lxxx. these are hys wordes.

Where I say that as long as y spirituall rulers wil pretende that their authozitype is so high and so immediatly deriued of god, that the people are bound to obey them without argument oꝝ resistence. &c. wꝝp these wordes I confesse that they haue auchozite immediatly deriued fro God. But as I sayed befoze in the seuenth chapter, master Doze hath a right great and a right inuētue wit, wherby he can lightly turne a sentence after his appetite. And so he doth here. &c. ¶

What high witte oꝝ inuētue I haue to turne a sentence, let the readers iudge.
But surely y heygth of my wit can not rech so high, as to perceiue in those wor-des of his, y sentence y himselfe turneth thē to, noꝝ I row no mans els, til these wordes, ¶ They haue auchozite, & these wordes, ¶ They pꝛted to haue auchozite be both one thing, which they wer neuer yet. And therfoze befoze his confession y he now maketh here new: I myght thā well take that exception which I haue brought ther, to a little better effect, thā doth his here, which wꝝ al his inuētellig & al hys new declaracions, bringeth all togither euer the lenger vnto the worse conclusion.

Foz now to colour this his ouersight ¶. iij. with

With all, hee telleth vs which maner of pretences he met in those wordes, whiche he would here so faine defende. And than in stede of pretending to be by goddes ordinaunce believed and obeyed in all thynges as wel wordes as dedes, he bringeth forth here a fewe amountyng in a some totall to the infinite number of fower.

The fyrst is, that the order and disposition of the thynges that are to be disposed of the church, be to be disposed by the ppretesse: which point to put as for a matter that hath made deuision betwene them and vs, is a point of small reason as farre as my reason can giue me. For I remembre not of any variace that euer arole betweene thē and vs for that point.

The seconde is, that al chryssen princes must subdue their execucions to bishoppes, and not to preferre thē aboue them. I can not tell you whither there be any such law made or not. But I can tell you well that though there be, thys point wil not serue hys purpose the value of a blue point. For I am sure he neuer saw in hys dayes any bishop in this realme, ble that pretence agaynst the king, or that euer there arose any deuision therupon.

The thirde is, that no charge should be set vpon clerkes by lay power. I neuer herde yet any deuision rise vpon this point in my dayes, nor he neither in his I dare say. For I neuer saw the day yet nor he neyther, but that whan any nede of the king & the realme required it, thei haue euer moze ben redy to set fares vpon themself, as liberally and as largely as any man well might with any good reason require.

The fourthe is hee sayeth, that if a secular iudge be negligent in doing of iustice, that than after monicion to amende it giuen to the iudge, if hee will not, than the spirituall iudge may compel him to it, or els supply his come and here the cause.

If I should looke now for these, it is lawes it might peradventure happen I should fynde, that thys man had mistaken some of them, as well as he hath misseunderstanden some of the other he hath spoken of before. But sith that I neuer knew grudge or deuision rse here vpon any of them, me nedeth neuer to loke moze for hys matter. For sith thys man neuer saw that any spirituall iuge hath interprised, in defaute of iustice to gyue any such monicion, or to supply hys come: were that lawe neuer so vnreasonable, yet to saye that vpon that lawe the tempozalthe hath here conceived such grudge as it hath ben a cause of deuision, thys pacifier of deuision may be much ashamed that euer he deuised it. For I dare say that as well this fourth cause, as many of all his other be such, as y people neuer neither talked of nor thought vpon, nor before his own booke, had neuer redde nor herde of. And therefore by the putting in of such thynges: euer y childe as I sayed in myne apology may sone perceiue that his hookes labour and entende not to quench, but rather to kindle deuision.

And therefore verely with hys leynge here enen in the ende and conclusion suche causes of hys deuision, which causes but dy hymself the people neuer herde of: I may well saye ones agayne good readers, is not this geare by thys good pacifier, brought vnto a wyle conclusion?

To those wordes wrytten in myne apology the. 169. leafe, this good man aunswereth thus.

And now to thys conclusyon of mayster Hoze I wyll saye thus, that I besech almighty God, that the ende of all these matters may come to this conclusion that the very groundely causes of these deuisions, that now be not onely in thys realme, but also in maner throught al chryssen realmes, may come to perfyte knowledge. For surely I doe not take it, that they beganne either by herelyes, or apostacyes as mayster Hoze in hys apology meaneth that thei should doe.

Here you may see good readers that thys good mā would be loth y it should appere, that the deuision, peryll, and harme haue any where sprongen vpon herelyes begonne and set forth by false apostatas, wedded freres and monkes, as clerely as it is known that by thocasion therof, there haue ben slain in Almain win these very few yeres, aboue. lxxx. persons in one somer and yet since among y Swichis whan Zuinglius was slaine, many thousandes kylled to, and the warre begonne by the heretykes, and the lasse by goddes greates goodnes layd in they owne neckes, as falsely as frith belieeth the catholikes, and agaynst the plaine and open knowe trouth, would with shame inoughe to himselfe make men wene that the catholikes ¶ Tho likes began the warre.

But than goeth he further and saith ¶ And if maister Doze will nedely endeuour hym selfe to hyde the truche therin, as it semeth he hath done in this chapter, and diuerse other places of her apology, by keeping secret such abusios and pretences, as in my consciēce haue ben most pꝛincipall causes of thys deu-sion, wherof parte be recited in the said treatise, and part in this aunswere but not all. ¶

¶ Of these there had nede in dede to be mo, and some moze true, and some of a lyttell moze substauce to, than bee the most part of these that this good manne hath layed forth yet.

¶ Now here he saith that I kepe secrete such a busios and pretences as be pꝛincipall causes of the deuision, wherof him selfe hath he saith shewed some: et-ther he meaneth that those which I kept secrete, be those that him selfe hath wꝛi-ten, or other beside theym. If he meane other: then either hym selfe knoweth the or not. If he know theym not: how knoweth he that I know them, or that there be any such at all? If hym selfe know the and shew them not: then he hyderth them and kepeth them secrete himself as well as I. Howe if he meane but those that him selfe hath wꝛyten: how can I kepe those secrete that he hath wꝛyten? Can I both gather vp al hys bookes & go hyde them, & also make the that haue red the goe vntredde the againe, or soz get what they haue redde?

But now after this, lykewyse as hee is wont whē reason faileth him to fal to preaching: so here, because reaso faileth him, he falleth to pzapeng, & therin thus he saith.

¶ I besech almighty god that he haue no power to doe it, but that the trouthe may come to light therin, though he res-sist it al that he can. For if it were know-en, and pꝛ fautes charitably reformed: all these deuisions woulde shortly haue an ende. ¶

¶ Pay perdy, this mā seeth wel ynough that though the fautes of the spiritualtye were neuer so fully reformed, yet coulde not all that suffise to bypnye all deuisions to an ende, but if one thing be done, which wll neuer be done, wherof (which he forgetteth) I gaue hym warning in the .iiij. leafe of mine Apologye in these wordes. ¶

¶ But now if this pacifier to cease & quenche thys deuision, coulde finde the meanes to make all the whole clergye good: yet soz all that, sith he layeth soz causes of thys deuision that some men say this by the clergye, and some mā saye by them that, were all the clergye nener so good in deede, and serued god uener so well, this deuision by his owne tale, yet coulde not soz all that cease, except he coulde pꝛouide further, that no pitcouise pacifier should in lamenting of deuision putte forth a booke and laye, that some lay men say that some of the clergye bee noughte, and loue their ease and theyz welth, and that some say that those that seme best and take most labour & paine, be but hypocrites soz all that, and serue Godde but soz bayne glozpe to geate them selfe laude and pꝛaife amonge the people. ¶

¶ Also if defautes should be charitably reformed, as thys man sayeth he woulde haue them: it woulde be nede then to set a lyttle moze charitable folke aboute it, then those haue ben, that haue begyled this good man with euill counsaile in hys bookes, and haue made hym vnder pretext of pacifieng deuision, set forth & encrease deuision, with deuising & spꝛeding abroad causes of murmure and grudge, making in some of them an elephant of a gnatte, and soz olde grudges byinging forth some such, as the people neuer had herde of tyll they redde hys bookes & some of the very worst, which were most effectuall causes if they were true, byinging forth by heapes with a ffugure of some saye, & very plaine lies in dede. ¶ Is thys the waye good readers soz a pacifier to make peace with, & put away deuisions?

¶ And now him selfe handeling pꝛ matter thus, he taketh of hys charitte great thought, lest I go aboute to hynder hys holy purpose. And therfore saith.

¶ I doute me very soze, that maister Doze goeth aboute rather to marre al, then to endeuoure hym selfe to make all well. ¶

¶ Which be the lykelyheddes now good readers that leade thys good man into thys great fere: Because I make open the shewde mynde of hys demure cou-tenaunce, and the harmful intent and purpose of his holy wholesome wordes.
 Because I woulde haue the temporalty and the spꝛitualty as the body and the soule of one man, loue wel together and agree and neyther of them be gladde to here euill of other, nor to giue eare to false sedicious flander, but the good folks

Exceeding
 good consist.

A folke of eyther parte, drawe both by one lyne accordyng to both the lawes to reppresse and kepe vnder the bad, & among other vices, speciall such pestilent heresydes, as els woulde oppresse & catholike fayth, and prouoke ydispleasure of god, and first sow deuisyon, and after ward reare rebellio in hys realme, as they haue done befoze thys tyme both here and in other places, & yf I to thys entent gyue myne aduice to keepe kyll those good lawes that both thys realme and al the corps of chrystendome haue long blessed & approued. Because I thus doe so therefoze this god man fereth yf I go aboute to marre all.

But whyle hys bookes go aboute on the tother side, to make the world wene, that heresydes be no causes of deuisyon, and to haue heretikes liue in yf lesse fere, with many malitious some saies falsely flandereth the ordinaris, of cruell wrongfull handelyng of the people, to dyspue the by dyede or by shame or other tediousse busines, to let heretikes alone, and go aboute with baulde reasons the best not worthe a ryfhe, to put away the good lawes that haue bene made agaynst them, and vnder colour of a seruour to the faith exhort men to go wynn the holy lande, and in the meane while yet wyth such wply mapes, labour wyth heresyques, to kyll by the stretes at home, and by the decay of the chrysten catholyque faith, prouoke the wrath of god vpon al our heddes whiche our lord rather turne vpon theyrs that so would haue it: hys bookes busely going aboute thys geare, hymselfe goeth aboute (ye se well perdy) to make al thing euill.

But now wyl I fynde finishe by hys. xx. chapter, wherein he goeth forwarde thus.

And in thys chapter maister More layeth diuers other obieccions to proue yf sayd letter vnreasonable, whiche were very tedious to rehearse at length. And therfoze I shal as shortly as I ca, touch some of them.

We know well ynough why thei be tediousse to rehearse. Surely because thei be very tediousse to answer.

But wherhe saith he wil rehearse some of the: he beginneth first to shew that I had no cause to doubt of hys woordes whererein hee sayeth that the spirituall rulers pretende theire authorite to bee so hyghe and so immediately deriued from god &c. I had saith he no cause to doubt of what authorite he ment.

Foz he saith that his woordes wer plain ynough, that he meaneth onely of such aucthorities, as thei pretende to haue (immediately from god.

To this I say plainly, that than are hys woordes plaine false. Foz hys woordes be, that they pretende that their authorite is so hyghe and so immediately deriued from god, yf the people are bound to obey them and to accept all that they do & teach, without argument, resistence, or grudge.

How knoweth every man very well that they doe not pretende to haue authorite immediately from god, to do al thing that they now lawfully doo and may doe, in which the people are now bounde to accept and obey them.

Foz as I sayd in myne apology, in many such thinges they pretende & clayme theyr aucthorite deriued from prynces. And therfoze ye se that and he labour aboute it thys. vii. yeres hee can neuer defend hys woordes, but that I answered him truely, and with the necessarye distincion that I there made, answered euery parte. And thys hymself seeth well inoughe, and therfoze in the. lxxx. leafe in the beginning of the second side where he rehearseth his woordes again, he leaueh out these woordes of his own. And to accepte al that they doo and theache.

Upon which woordes the point of the matter hangeth. And therfoze here you see now, that whereas in the beginning of thys chapter, he would make it seme that I steale two or thre woordes of his whiche I neither did nor needed for anye strength that was in the: here was hymselfe faine to steale away his own woordes, to begyle the reader vpon the reading of the place, and make hym passe ouer his faute for the while vnmaked.

And thus good reader you se, that to saue hys owne woordes by pryght, and to impugne mine: in thole two leaues. lxxx. and. lxxxi. he bestowed hys labour in vayne.

But then goeth he ferther and toucheth these woordes of mine Apologye, wyrtten in my sayd. xxxv. chapter. folio. 165.

Surely in such thinges as yf whole cletgy of chrystendome teacheth and ordereth in spirituall thinges, as bee dyuers of those lawes whiche thys pacifier in some places of this boke toucheth, being made agaynst heretikes, and albeit that they bee and longe haue bene throughe

Athrough the whole corps of chrysendome both temporality & spirituality, by long blage and custome ratified, agreed, and confirmed, yet he layeth some lacke in them calling them very soze, in those thynges I say, that syth I nothing dout in my minde, but in that congregacion to Goddes honour graciously gathered togither the good assistance of the spirite of god is according to Chrystes promise as berclly present and assistente as it was wyth his blessed apostles, me thought with reuerence and withoute resistance, grudge, or argumentes to receyue them. And if a prouinciall counsaile erre, there are in Chrystes church ordinary wayes to refozme it.

But in such thynges as anye spirituall gouernours after a lawefull order and fozme, deuise for the spiritual weale of theyr soules that are in their charge, & whych thynges are suche as good so lke may soone perceiue the for god, in these thynges at the least wyse should the god not giue care to the badde folke and frowarde, y against the beste thyng that can be deuiled can neuer lacke a fonde frowarde argument. †

To these wordes this good man answered me thus.

When to thewe my mynde in some thynges that maister Doze hath touched yet farther in the sayed chapter: I wyll say I agree with maister Doze, that in such thynges as the whole clergi of chrysendome techeth and ordzeth in spirytual thynges, and which of long time haue ben by long blage and custome thzough y whole corps of chrysendome spirituality & tempoality, ratified agreed and confirmed, ought wyth reuerence to be receyued: but yet if the same thynges thzough long continuance & thzough abusyons that rise by occasio of the, proue hurtful and ouer greuous to the people to bere: the may y people grudge and complain lawfully to their superiours, & desire that they may bee refozmed, as lawfully as they may do to haue temporall lawes refozmed when neede requireth. †

As vnto thys, because he is so gentle to agree wyth mee, I shall as gently agree wyth him againe, but yet he getteth nought thereby. For sith the lawes agaynst whych hee writeth, made for y corzeccion of heretikes, as I haue in y. rb. rvi. and. rviij. chapyter plainly proued agaynst hym, and rezhoued his obzeccions therein, be good and very reasonable, and that abusyons (by occasio wherof he would make it now seeme, y in long continuance they beede hurtfull) he proueth not one in thys wozyde, but by false floundrouse somesates surmised agaynst the ordinaryes, & dyuers times found false befoze the kinges honozable counsaile: this answer here of hys, helpeth nothing hys matter.

Then goeth he farther and sayeth on thys wyse.

I wyll also agree that in the congregacion of the clergy, to goddes honour graciously gathered togither: the good assistance of the spirite of Godde, according to Chrystes promise, wil be as berclly present and assistent with them, as it was wyth his blessed apostles, if they order themselfe, in meekenes and charitie and put all their trust in god, as y apostles did. But if they wyll truste in theyr owne wit and in worldly policy: then may they lyghtly leese the spyrite of god. And whether it wer so at the making of the lawes, which maister Doze speket of concerning hereby or not, I can not tell: but thys wyll I say, that if they were not good and reasonable in themselfe at the fyrst making, that they were neuer made by the assistance of the spirite of God. And surely I cannot the se, how the blage and long continuance of them can ratify or confirme the. For as it is of an euill custome, that the longer it is bled, the greater is the offence: so is it of an euill lawe. And lyke as an euill custome is to be put away, so it is of an euill law. †

Of what strength the general counsailes be, and whether wee may in any of them by lawfull order gathered togither, put any dissidence or mistrust, and if we may then in what maner thynges and in what wise they bynd, and whom and how long: I shall not nede for thys matter to dispute with thys good man. And all hys doute concerning the sayed lawes, whether they be reasonable or not, and whether the continuance of them be good or not: in al these thynges haue I so confuted thys good man already, that these wordes of hys can serue of nought.

But yet to make it seeme that he saied somewhat, and that no lawe of y church which he hath here impugned, made agaynst heretikes, was eyther ratified or approued in this realme: ye shall here how properly he proueth. A good reader these are his wordes.

And

A And the lawes affirmed by vsage & agreement of the people be the lawes of fasting and keeping of holydayes, & such other as the people of theyr fre agrement accepte and agree vnto: but these lawes made for punishment of heresyces were neuer agreed by a comen assent of the people, but that some particuler persons, wherof some haue ben guiltye, and some paduerture not guilty, haue ben punished thereby right soze against their willes. And that cannot be a confirmacion of them that so agree against their wyll. But as to them that doe the correccion. It is a confirmacion: for they do it with their good wyll. And though that correccion were a sufficient confirmacion, as agaynst the that be so punished: yet it can not be a confirmacion to make the law appoued for all the residue of the pople. I cannot see therefore that any ratyfing, agreing, or confirmyng of the people can bee psoned in the lawes, couerynge the correccion for heresyce.

Did ener any man good readers here such another reason as thys is: De: de: nich not but that the suit ex officio. and the order taken in the generall counsaile, & the other further proceeding agaynst heresyces, according to the comen receiued spirituall lawes, haue ben vsually so accustomed in this realme, and by the pynnes of the same and generally by all the people by comen vsage accepted, and ouer that, by plain parliament lawes and orders made for al temporal officers to assist the ordinarie therein, & to put the offenders in execucion thereupon and knowing well al thys, he dissimuleth it euery whit, & saith not one worde therto, but argueth that it was neuer ratified, in this realme, because the heretikes y are for heresy punished, be burned agaynst their will, and agree not themself therto. This reason wyll I neuer labour to confute. For if any man be so mad to like it, I were almost as madde as he if I would reason with hym.

After this he resoꝛteth againe to the vnreasonableness of the lawes, & proueth them vnreasonable, by the sentence of his owne conceite. For these are his wordes.

And then whither the lawes in themselves be good and indifferent or not, I wyll remytte the iudgement in that behalfe to them that haue aucthoritie. But to shew my conceite therein, I shal with good wil euen as my conscience moueth me to, and that is, that I could neuer see, that it was reasonable to bee accepted as a lawe, that a man shoulde be accused and know not his accuser.

And that it is yet moze vnreasonable y a man shoulde be condemned, & knowe not the witnesse that condemned him. Also that a man vpon suspencion shoulde be dꝛiuen to make his purgacion at the wyll of the ordinarie, or be accursed: Or that a perjured witnesse shoulde condemn him, that he had riced of soze: That a great offender and a lesse offender shoulde haue one lyke punishment, if they renounced: or bee a like arrested and put in prison: I neuer saw no indifferencie in it.

Now good readers as for the conceite y the good conscience of thys man hath conceiued, is of very trouth but euen a very poze conceite, as in the said chapyters the. xv. the. xvi. and the. xvii. euery man may some perceiue.

Howbeit in the last point that he findeth so great a faute, that a greater offender & a lesse offender, shoulde haue one lyke punishment, this man looked not well aboute hym whan hee wrote that worde. For whan the thyng is well looked on, the weight of hys reason wil fall vpon the wrong syde, and all agaynst his minde. For whereloeuer a greater offender and a lesse offender be both punished alike: if the greater offender haue no moze paine than the lesse hath deserued, there is the order somewhat lesse sharpe, than it shoulde be, but yet not vnrigheteouse. For if it were, than were the lawes of thys realme vnlawfull, that hange vpon hym y doeth but robbe a man, as well as hym y robbeth him & killeth him to. Now so is it in y spirituall law, that whan two do both renounce their heresy, and abiure and beare faggottes both, if the tone hilde. x. heresyces and the tother but twaine, the greater offender hath no moze paine than the lesse deserueth. And therefore if this man in that case complayne: thys complainte (as I said) turneth vnto y tother side, and findeth the faute in that, that wher y lesse offender beareth one faggot, the greater beareth not siue, if their bodies be lyke of strength.

Howbeit good readers all thys tale of hys is to no purpose at al. For in the spirituall law, they was the offences, & consider the circumstances, and enioin the penaunce after the waight of gaultie

of

Qof the trespas, and for enprisoning vse to put no mā to it, but where god reaso wolde not suffre hym walke abode. And therfoze I suppose, that whan the man was witting this, hys witte was walking toward the holy lande. For if he wolde say that he meaneth by h lesse offender & the moze offender such twaine as a biure both, and bere sagottes both, where the tone was wo:thy and the tother not wo:thy at al: I say that neither hys wo:des will mayntaine any suche meaning (for he speaketh generally of h lesse offender and the moze) noz also hee pueth none such but by his flaunderouse somesates, which haue bene plaine proued false.

Chan goeth he ferther and knytteth by all the chapyter with thys goodlye conclusion.

And if any wyl say that these reasos wil giue a boldenes to heretykes: truly I wyl not fully make a unswere therto. But this will I say, that I thinke verely that thei wil giue a boldenesse to true the & true men. And verely I haue herd say, that it were better to suffre an offender goe unpunished, than to punythe him vnrighteously and against due order of iustice.

Marke god readers here for our lordes sake, what maner of reason thys is. The thing that himselfe very well perceiueth to be the very weyght and pyth of al the matter, and therfoze at last obsecteth it against himselfe, as a thynge h had neede to be soyled, what aunswere doeth he make vnto it: He sayth he will not aunswere it fully. In sayth that is spoken very dully: well, syth so great weyght hangeth on it, if he wolde not aunswere it fully, hee shoulde haue aunswere at the least wile halfe. If not halfe, a fourth part yet, or a syth part at the least. For thys that he saith, aunswerech no part at all. For two thinges he sayth, one that though he can not saye nay, but that hys reasons if they be folowed, shall giue a boldenesse to heretykes: yet he thinketh they shall also giue boldenesse to trouth and true menne.

And by my trouth I thynke verely on the tother side, that if heretyques haue boldenesse giuen the, and (as they thereby soone shal) take corage and much encrease, thei shal make h trouth shrinke, and many true me aferde. And if the giuing boldenes to falsed, shal giue boldenesse to trouth, all say than & giue boldenes, and than loke whither true me shal ware the bolder by it.

The second thing that he saith is this whych yet he doth not affirme but sayth he hath herd it sayed.

That it were better to suffer an offender goe unpunished, than punythe him vnrighteously and against due order of iustice.

Thys were somewhat pzetely sayd, if thys good man had proued that heretykes myght not be punished by those lawes, but vnrighteously and agaynst the order of iustice. But than how hath he proued h? By no meane in this wo:ld but twaine. The tone, h it is not righteouse noz indifferent, that a greter offender and a lesse offender should be punished, impzisoned, or arrested lyke, which vnreasonable reaso oppugnerth plainly in all criminall causes almost, al the lawes of thys realme & yet helpeth not hys matter, but impayreth it much, as a lyttle here befoze I haue well & clerely proued.

His other reason is hys generall reason that is his whole ground, wherupō he buildeth agaynst all those lawes all hys whole matter, that is to witte, that by those lawes which are made for punythemēt of heretykes, it may somtyme for tyme that a mā may be punished whiche is no heretyke in dede.

How is thys reason so vnreasonable to be layed for a reason to take awaye a law, that if it were admitted for reason it coulde suffer neyther in thys realme, noz in any realme els any law stand in this wo:ld, h all h wittes in thys wo:ld coulde imagine or deuise, for any maner punythemēt of vngraciause folke. And albeit that of such lawes some may be reformed fro the wo:se vnto the better, though neuer fully to such point, but h an innocent may take harme: yet bothe by reason & experiance it appereth plainly, h these lawes which he wolde haue chaunged and made moze easy, can neuer haue any good chaunge, but by making them moze streight.

And thus hath this good man soze ouersene hymselfe, moze I trowe than xx. times in hys. xx. chapyter.

The. xxi. chapyter.

In hys. xxi. chapyter begynnyng in the. lxxxiiij. leafe, because I said in mine apology that there be few parties in hys booke of deuylsion, that shal if they be well son.

Considered, appere so good at length, as they seme to some men at the fyrst sight and at superfiycall reading: he prouoketh mee to shewe what other fautes I finde therein. And than to prycke me forwarde, he byngceth forth twoo or threethynges, whych he sayth it semeth most lykely that I should meane. But wherfore it should be most likely y I should meane those thynges, therof sheweth he nothyng, but leaueth folke occasyon to thynke, that hys own minde misgiueth him in those thynges. For mee hath he neuer herd make any busines of them.

B And afterwarde in the lease. 91. a. gayne he prouoketh me to the same.

And there he reciteth how many chapters of his I meddle not w<sup>al</sup>, wherin he myght haue made a thozter wo<sup>rke</sup> if he would haue let them stande that I touched not, and haue spoken of them only that I touched. For they were very few as he that was very vnwilling to haue touched any one at all, saue for y much euill that couertly was cloked in them,

C And for the withdrawing of that cloke that menne might the better see what it ment: I touched the fyrste chapter for a shew, and the. viij. and the. viij. for y they laboured to the great decay of the catholike sayth, to put away or chaunge into wo<sup>rse</sup> the most specyall god lawes, both of the whole church and of thys realme that haue bene made and obserued long for the preseruation thereof.

And the first chapter was in effecte nothyng els, but by false slauderouse surmyses agaynst y ordinarres (as though they misshaded me for heresy) a shewd reueratue to it. And therfore leauing

D hys other triffles alone: I answered in effecte onely these, of whych so muche harme myght grow. Which thynges if they had bene out of hys booke, all the remanaunt god & bad togyther, should haue gone forth for me, and therfore yet so shall they: For I purpose not to embusie my self wyth confuting of euery sawte that I fynde in euery mannes booke. I should haue then ouer muche a dooe.

For I wyll not dyspraisse or dep<sup>raue</sup> any thing that I thynke good eyther in hys booke or in any mans els. And therfore I haue in mine apology sayed expressly, that he saith some thynges wel. But for as much as there be many thynges nought to: I gyue therfore y reader warning not to walke away wyth the ouer hasty, but reade the wyth iudge-ment and at uise them well, and not be licue euery spirite, but proue whither it be of god or not, & that that is god take, and that that is euill, lette it go to the deuyll. 1. John. 4.

I will allow therfore and lyke not a litle the great god minde of Salē towarde the vauquishing of the greate Turke, and conquering of the holy lād wherin he spēdeth y tother. iij. chapt. of hys booke. But I mislyke much again, that as hee would dilate the sayth, by force of sweozde in farre countreys henle: so he labourceth to chaunge and take away the god and holsome lawes, wherby the sayth is preserued here at home.

I like also meruailously well, that such pointes of the catholyque sayth as heretikes nowe laboure to distrope, as prayeng to sayntes, pilgrimage, & purgatory, and the sacramentes, and specially the blessed sacrament of the aulter, wherof in the. lxxxvi. leafe hee speaketh so well, that as helpe me god it did mee good to reade it: this I sape lykerh mee meruailously well, that the right faith of these pointes he confesseth so wel and so fully for hys owne persone. Wat the better oppinion that I haue of hys own person therein, the more so<sup>r</sup> am I to se, that hys bookes are by sōc shewde cou<sup>s</sup>saile handeled in suche wise, as if they wer solowd, would make y faith decay and perithe in many other folke. Thys is the great thyng that in hys bookes greneeth me.

For as for the point that he speaketh of in the lease. 91. of that that the priestes should cate no flesh fro quinquagintime to Easter: I take it for a matter as smal as he docth I. But than he asketh mee wherfore in the. xxxi. Chapter of mine apology beginning in the. 175. leafe, I make to great a mater of it. Whoso list to reade the chapter, shall see that I wrote it not all in vaine, nor thewe myselfe vnwilling that the priestes should doe it neither, though they bee not bounden to it. But the lesse that the weighte of the matter was, the more cause thys man gaue me to speake therof. For the more was he to blame to put that and other such small matters as that is, for causes of so great deuision, as he sa<sup>r</sup>myselfe y thys is. This was lo<sup>y</sup> cause y made me to speake therof. Which cause this mā gaue himselfe, and therfore nedeth not to meruaile as he doth, wherfore I spake therof.

A And therefore thus haue I good readers now replied to euerie chappter of hys booke by row, saue only the lasse thze whych go about a good viage into the holy lande, a great way farre of fro me. And I haue not leaped to and fro, now forward, now backward, in suche maner as hee playeth in hys aunswere made vnto mee, wpthoute cyther order kept or cause apperyng wherefore, saue onely the cause that euerie mā may spy, that he woulde not haue it secne what places he left vntouched. Whyth is in a maner the most part of altogether, that in my booke touched y thze chapters of hys. And I haue on y tother syde not left any one piecc vnproued, that myself spake of befoze, or that any thinge perterned vnto me.

B And therfoze wheras in y beginning of the .xxij. chapiter, Simkin Salem giueth his sentence vppon the sayed aunswere to the sayed apologye, and alloweth the sayd aunswere well: me thynketh that if he considered not only how much he hath left vnaunswered, & how much of hys owne wordes vndefended, whych he nothynge hath touched at all, but ouer that how feblly he hath defended those thinge y hee hath touched here: Salem being indifferent, had bene lyke to haue allowed it but a little.

C For setting asyde for the while al the remanant, if he go but to the very pzinccypal point alone, wherin he labourerth to chaunge and put awaye those good lawes, the chaunge wherof (such as hee deuilerth) y decay of the catholique faith and the encrease of heresy would folowe: in that point alone, I say we laye agaynst him, the comen consent of thys realme. And he layeth hys owne reason agaynst it. We lay agaynst him the consent of the generall counsaile. And agaynst thys he layeth hys owne reason. We lay agaynst him the generall approbacion of all christen realmes. And agaynst this he layeth his owne reason. And what is hys owne irrefragable reason y he layeth agaynst al thys? Surely no more as you se, but y by those lawes an innocent may somtime take wzong. Agaynst thys reason we lay him, that if thys reason should stande, than agaynst malefactoris there could no lawe stāde. We lay agaynst it also y by his deuices if thei were folowed, by the encrease of heresies many innocentes must needes take much more wzong. To this aunswere he, that he wil not aunswere y.

E And now when Salem seeth that he cā not aunswere that, & seeth y al the weight of the matter hangeth vpon that: than Sym Salem giueth sentence y he hath aunswered very well. But surely if such aunswering be well, I wote not which way a man myght aunswer ill.

And therfoze wheras Simkin Salē sayth, that if thys good man wil, he wil cause a frende of hys aunswere all the remanant: hec may dooe thys good man a much moze frendely turne, if he made his frend aunswere this better first that this good man hath aunswered already. Howebeit if they list thus to gyue ouer this, and assay what they can saye better to any other piecc: lette them a Goddes name hardely go to for me.

F And if they say any thing metely to the matter, I wyl put no frende to payne to make them aunswere, but at leasure conuenient thal aunswere thē my selfe. And where they say well, I will not let to say so. And where they say wzong, I will not let to tel them. But on the other side if they goe no better to worke, nor no nerer to the matter, then thys man hath done: I thal peradventure let them euen alone, and lette them lyke their wytyng theynself, & no man els.

G But now lettynge passe al speccyall the poyntes: I thal aunswere the generalities y this good man speaketh of. For in the leafe. .cc. these are his wordes.

H And now thal I say sō what ferther in a generalitpe, as maister Doro hath done, and that is this: that all y I speke in the said treatise, was to appeace this deuision, and not to beginne any, ne to continue it. And therefore howe they can saue their conscience, that say I byd rather intend a deuision then agrement, I cannot tel, their owne conscience thal be iudgc. And I enteded also somwhat to moue y myght bee occasion to put awaye abusyons, euyl examples, and heresies: & not to encrease the or maintein them I dare holdly say.

I To this I aunswere, that it neither was nor is my minde, that men should thinke that he ment euill himselfe, as I haue in many places of mine apolygpe testified. But verely I thought and yet thinke, that by some wyly thzewes hys booke was so inisthandeled, y it ment nought, though he ment wel. For wher as he saieth that with hys booke of deuision, all hys purpose was to appease deuision: I wyl not contend wpth him vpon hys owne mynde.

A But surely this wyll I say, that if I had ben of y<sup>e</sup> minde to solow and set forth deuilsson: I woulde haue v<sup>e</sup>sed even the seifesame wates to kyndle it, y<sup>e</sup> he v<sup>e</sup>sed (as he sayth) to quench it.

Then goeth he ferther and sayeth.

A And ferther as maister M<sup>o</sup>ze knoweth better then I, mentire est contra mentem ire, that is to say to ly is when a man sayeth agaynst hys owne minde, & in good fayth in all that treatise, I speake no<sup>t</sup>hing but that I thought was true.

B To thys I aunswere, that in deede such a thing I haue redde, and as I remembre in Aulus Gellius. Which thing though I haue now no leisure to looke fo<sup>r</sup>: yet two pointes I remember thereof. One that it is there mentiri and not mentire, which infinitiue mode in what booke of grammer thys good man hath founde, I canuot tel. I was aserd it had bene ouerseene in the prynting. But I haue looked the correccions, and there finde I no faute founde therin.

C The tother poynt I remembre that there is a difference put betwene mentiri et mendacium dicere, that is as we myght say betwene hym that wittingly lyeth, and hym that telleth a lie wening y<sup>t</sup> it were true. And here it is sayd, wittingly not to tell a lye, pertaineth to a good man.

Ecclesi. 19.

And not to tel a lye v<sup>n</sup>ware, is the part of a wise man. And surely sith the scripture sayeth that he that thortely belyeueth is ouer light: thys good man to belyeue so many lies so soone, and with so many some saies to set the forth in print to the rebuke and slaunder of the spyrituall iudges, and make men wene they misse handled men fo<sup>r</sup> heresies, though the mannes innocent minde made the synne the lesse, yet was the thing at the least no lesse, then a very great lightnesse & also a great p<sup>r</sup>oufe towarde the re- p<sup>r</sup>oufe of his wo<sup>r</sup>des y<sup>e</sup> folow next, wher he goeth ferther thus.

A And ferther I wyl a certaine maister M<sup>o</sup>ze as far as in me is, that I neyther had any suttile shrewes counsaile, ne any euyll counsaile at the makynge of the sayed treatise, which hee calleth the booke of deuilsson (as is saied before).

To thys I aunswere, that albeit this good man and I be at much variaunce here in diuerse thinges: yet fo<sup>r</sup> the good and playne professyon of the catholique fayth that I fynde in hym, in good fayth I much better loue hym then in y<sup>e</sup> point to belieue him. Fo<sup>r</sup> if he sayed therein true, then were all the fautes onely hys owne, in whych as I haue often saied, I much rather thinke, that some suttile shrewes haue deceiued hym.

And besyde sondry other thynges y<sup>e</sup> lede me so to thynke, one verye stronge thyng it this, that euery ma<sup>n</sup> may wel se by hys booke, that all such as haue resorted to hym to tell hym any such thinges, as vnder some sayes hee put out agayne, haue alway told him euill, and neuer told him good. And of missehandling fo<sup>r</sup> heresies haue cuer tolde hym lies, and neuer told him true. Fo<sup>r</sup> wher as the punishment fo<sup>r</sup> heresies hath be very litle any where, saue even here at hand, and here but right done to them, & that with much fauour to: they haue made hym good sely soule belyeue, that ordynaries missehandle men fo<sup>r</sup> heresy in maner throughout the realme.

Also whercas such slaunderous clamour hath bene sundry times of late in all that euer complayned, playnly p<sup>r</sup>oued false befoze the kynges most honorable counsaile, not one man came to tell hym nothyng thereof, no<sup>r</sup> not one some say therof w<sup>r</sup>itten in al hys booke, and ouer thys whercas myne owne self haue playnly tolde hym the same thinges in mine apologue by wyrtynge: yet (whych most meruaile were of al, saue fo<sup>r</sup> such wylly shrewes) euery man may well see that he neuer redde it. Fo<sup>r</sup> hee sayeth not one wo<sup>r</sup>de thereto.

And therfore it is ethe to percesue what focuer him selfe say whych is loth of his goodnesse to putte other folke in faute, that there bee some wylly shrewes so muche aboute hym, that they neyther suffer him any thyng to here but that them selfe liue to tell hym, no<sup>r</sup> yet any thing to rede, but wher them selfe lyff to turne hym.

And nowe sythe I haue here answered these generaltyes of hys: I wyll not longe encumbze you with anye generaltyes of myne owne, but generally I woulde that all were well. And so helpe mee my sauoure and none other wyse, but as I woulde wishe none heretike one halp<sup>r</sup>th harme, that had clerely left his heresy, and were wel tourned to God. But on the tother syde, who so stricke stil therein: rather woulde I wythe hym sozow to his sinne, wherby there are many folke many tymes amended, then prosperously to procede in his mischypse to the losse of hys own soule and other mens to. And toward that point, againste

A good wyth.

Against all malefactours in the spirituall and the temporall, woulde I wythe all good folke of bothe partes to agree, and eche loue other wel, and stik fast to the faith, whych were like soze to decay by the chaunge of these good lawes that thys god mā goth about to deströi. For whole vnreasonablenesse therein is better to be perceiued, with the daunger and peryll that woulde ensue thereon: I wyl besyze you good readers to resozte to myne Apology, & begynnning at the lease 270. reade vnto the lease. 287. wherein you shal I trust be wel and fully satisfi- ed. And vnto all that euer is in all that spoken: this man hath nothing said.

And where as in confuting the fauts that this man findeth in the suit ex officio, and the lawes made againste heretikes, I haue vsed some examles of the comon lawe, whiche this man hath labored to proue vnlyke, and I haue therein clearely confuted hym a freshe, it may peradventure happen that he wyl nowe take a nother way therein, and say: that in suche poyntes those spirituall lawes may be reformed, and those temporal to.

Howe be it if he so saye, but if men forgette what hath bene sayde befoze: elles wyl they see that hys sayeng wyl not serue hym.

Foz firste as I haue sayde offer then ones all redye, the same thynges in the comon lawe be not be chaunged. For yf they bee: there shall come thereof moze harme then good. And if it happen one innocent to take harme by the law: ther shall syue for one take moze harme by the chaunge.

Moze ouer if we should for that cause chaunge those temporal lawes, that is to wit because some innocent may som- time take harme by the: we must chaunge by the same reason, all that old vsed law that a man may be arrested and remain in pryson tyll he fynde suretyes for the peace, vpon the bare othe of his enemye that faith he is a fearde of him. For by that lawe maye sometyme an innocent take harme to. And yet muste that lawe stande if we do well. For els shall there by the chaunge mo innocentes take moze harme.

What trouble haue there many men in Wales, by that they be compelled to be bounden to the peace, bothe for theint selfe and for theyr seruauntes and other frendes to: And yet is the order there so necessarye that in manye lordshippes it may not be forborne.

And surely if we fall to chaungynge lawes vpon that simple ground: we must then chaunge so many that it wolde not be well.

Besides this if men should reforme and chaunge a lawe, because that an innocent maye somtyme take harme thereby: then must they when they haue chaunged it, chaunge it yet agayne, and after that chaunge, yet chaunge it agayne, and so forth chaunge after chaunge and neuer cease chaunging til the world be all chaunged at the daye of dome. For neuer can al the wittes that are in it, make any one penal law, such that none innocent may take harme thereby.

How be it if a new lawe were byawen and put forth to be made againste ane suche mischiefe as woulde els do muche harme: god reason it were to take an exception to the byl, and shewe that innocentes myght be muche harmed by this point or y, and therewith prouide the remedie & put it in the lawe, and stoppe as many suche gappes as then could be spied. Yea and if after the lawe made men founde notable harme, that good folke were muche wronged by it, and the lawe suche that it either might be forborne, or els the meanes found to be chaunged to the better: god reason would it to make prouision for it.

But surely to come forth as this man cometh here, agaynst so god lawes, so well made, and by so great authozity, so longe approued thow the whole corps of Christendome, in this realme ratified specially by parliament, and that vpon a prouise not without great grounde and cause, euer synce founden so prouy- table for preseruacion of the faith, and proued so necessary vpon this mas own deuices, that without great encrease of heresies they can not be forborne, nor neuer canne be chaunged but either to the strayghter or els to the worse: to come now forth and for appealing of diuision, solve first a sclauder that may make diuision, and the labour to chaunge those lawes, vpon none other ground but one ly that an innocent maye happe to take harme by meane of false iudges, & then proue not any wrong done, but by false som saies onely against which false som saies the truth is proued contrary, both by iuste examinacion befoze the kynges counsaile, and ouer that playnely by this one point also, whiche no man can denye, that there is no lawe prouided against so great a crime, by whiche lawe

By the change of lawes cometh greates harme.

Allesse people haue in this realme be punished: therfore to come now thus as thys good man doth, and procure the chaunge of these lawes, so old, so good, and so necessary, and to make them moze easye, wherewith heretikes would ware hold, which thing himselfe (as you se) denyeth not in the ende: what is this good Chri-stien readers, but to procure that the ca-tholyque Christien saythe, myghte fade and fal away:

And yet as for thys man hym selfe to tell you for conclusion, what I thinke, all be it there are as you see ryght euyl and perillous thinges in his booke, with deuyres that woulde make heresyces euerraise: yet si the he professeth so playnely the catholyke Christien sayth, and bi his exhortacion also toward the conquest of the holye lande, declareth hys mynde zealous and feruent toward it, I rather beleue though himselfe therto say nay, that in those thinges which he wyrteth so perillous & so nought, some wylye shrewes begyle the good innocent man, then that hymselfe in hys owne mynde, meane all that harne.

But yet for as much as in this point, without sight of mans hart we can but go by gesse, and who so goeth by gesse, may be deceiued. (For (as hymselfe saith) a wolfe may looke simply lapt in a sheepes skynne) I shall therefore truste the best, and leaue þe truth to God. And concerning suche euyl wyrtinges, sy the it must nedes be, that he wrote them either deceiued by some shrewes, or els but of hymselfe, I can no moze do for him, but hartely praye for hym thus. If shrewes deceiue him: God send them shortly fro hym. If he wrote the of his own mynde: then si the things be nought, he wrote them either of euyl wyll, or of ouer sight.

If he wrote them of malpce, God geue the euyl mā moze grace. If he wrote the of foli: God giue the good mā moze wit.

And thus I beseeche our Lord send vs euerychone, both the spiritual and the tē-poral to, both wytte and grace to agree & charitable together in goodnes, and eche to loue oꝝ prayer, ther, and eche for other to praye, and for those that of both partes are passed into purgatoꝝ, and there pray for vs as we pray here for the, that they and we bothe thorowe the merites of Christes bytter passion, may bothe wyth our own prayers, and the intercession of al holy sain-tes in heauen, auoiding the eternal fyre of hel, haue pytye powzed vpon vs in the very fyre of purgatoꝝ, whyche in those twoo places verlye bur-nethe soules. And finallye for our faithe & good woꝝkes, which hys grace

(woꝝ-kyng wyth
the wyls of tho-ses that wytte haue) geueth eche good mā here: God geue vs in heauen together euer-lastig glorye.
