

Aoz gently, not only went in cōpany, but was also their chief guide & ringleader. And hereby did Chyrist at his death giue al menne a right good lesson, to beware that no man liuing should assure hymself of h̄ cōtinuāce of ani woꝛldly welch, which is full fickle and vnſure: & name-ly that no chyriſten creature, whole hole confidence ſtādeth in the heauēly enheritance, should immoderately deſire any vaine woꝛldely renowne.

The pꝛieſtes oꝛ rather the chief pꝛieſtes, the phariſies, the ſcribes, and the aũcientes of the people, cauſed this rabble of raskalles to be ſent againſt chyriſt. And ſurely the better nature that euery thing is of, the woꝛſe watech it at lēgth, if it ones beginne to fall out of courſe.

So Lucifer who was by god created in excellency aboue al the angels in heauē, aſſone as he ſuffred hiſelf to miſcarry by pꝛide, became the ſowleſt ſende in hell.

In like caſe here, it was not the ſealy ſimple ſoules, but thauũcientes of the people, the ſcribes, the phariſies, h̄ pꝛieſtes and the biſhoppes, the heades and rulers of the pꝛieſtes, whoſe part it had be to haue ſene iuſtice executed, and goddes cauſe furthered, theſe were they I ſay, that chiefly conſpired together, to haue the bzight ſonne of iuſtice clerelye extinguiſhed, & thone-ly be gotten ſonne of god moſt cruelly murdered. No ſuch ſcārike ſoly were they bzought, thꝛough couetice, pꝛide, and enuie.

Cet is thys point not ſleightlye to be paſſed ouer, but aduifedly to be conſidered, howe Judas who diuerſe times in other places was to his reproche called by the name of a traitoure, is nowe here to his ſoule ſhame to, called by the honourable name of an Appoſtle. No ſaith the Euaungeliſt commeth Judas Iſcariot one of the twelue.

Judas Iſcariot I tell you, (not one of the faithles painims, not one of the Jewes chyriſte moꝛtall enemies, not one of chyriſtes mene diſciples, (& yet who wold haue ſuſpected any ſuch thing in them) but one alas of chyriſtes owne choſen ap- poſtles, is not aſhamed here both to be liuer his lord and maiſter into their hādes, and alſo to be the head capitaine of theſe, that ſhoulde take hym himſelf.

Here haue all men that bene in office and aucthoritie, a good leſſon to learne, that when they here themſelſes ſolēpne-ly called by names of hyghe honour, cauſe haue they not alway therein gretlye to reſoiſe, and therewith to ſtande highly in their owne conceit, but than eſpecially to recken the ſame beſt to beſeeme them, if their otone conſcience do ſhewe them, that ſoz the well doing of their duties in their offices, they do in deede deſerue to beare ſo honourable a name. With els may they be full ſoze aſhamed: vnleſſe they take pleaſure in ſuch bare vaine woꝛdes, ſeing as many as be aloſte and in aucthoritie, be they great eſtates, Pꝛinces, Dukes, Empe- rours, pꝛieſtes oꝛ biſhoppes, if they be nought, muſte of thys be well aſſured, that whanſoener ſolke doe ring in their itching eares ſuch gaye glorious titles of office, they doe it not with their hart truly to honour them, but h̄ moꝛt fre-ly vnder a colour of pꝛaiſe, couertely to controll them, ſoz thoſe honourable rowmes ſo vnwoꝛthely bleſed. And how little the Euaungeliſt ment to commend Judas, where he ſet him ſozth by the ſolēpne name of his apoſtleſhip, ſaieng: Judas Iſcariot one of the twelue, he plainely declareth, in that a little after he calleth him likewiſe traitour.

The traitour ſaith he had gyuen them a token ſaieng: whōſoever I ſhall kiſſe, he it is, take holde on him.

Vpon this is there a queſtion mo-ved amonge, wherefoze it was nedefull ſoz the traitour to giue his company a pꝛi- up token, whereby Jeſus might be dyſ- cerned from the reſte. Whereunto ſome anſwere thus, that ſoz thys reſpect they agreed vpon a pꝛiup toke, becauſe chyriſt had diuerſe tymes befoze ſodently ſcaped their hādes, whā they wēt about to take him. How beſt ſeing he was wonte ſo to ſcape in the day time, euen out of theyꝛ handes that verye wel knewe hym, by h̄ power of his godhead, eyther vaniſhing out of their ſight, oꝛ paſſing thꝛough the thꝛyckell of them, while they were amaſed, this pꝛiup token gyuen to knowe hym by, coulde lyttle haue ſerued them to kepe hym from ſcaping. And therefoze doe ſome other ſay that the tone of the Janelles was ſo lyke vnto Chyriſte (ſoz whyche cauſe they thynke alſo he was called our lordes bzother) that vn- leſſe menne did well eye them both, the tone coulde not lightly be knowne from the tother. But ſeing they myght haue apprehended them both, and caried the both away w̄ them into ſōe place where they

A they might at moze laisour hauing the both together, easely haue discerned the, what neded them to care for any priuie token at all: The night (as appeareth by the ghospell) was farre spent in dede. And albeit it was almost breake of day, yet was it night still. And that is was dark to, testified the torches and lanternes whiche they brought thither with them: the lyght wherof so dimmed their syght, that in so farre a dysfaunce they coulde not so easely dyscerne other folk, as other might do thein. And notwithstanding by reason the Doone was at the full, the night peradventure was meetely light, yet could that serue them no farther, but to see a farre of the bignesse of their bodyes, and yet not so distinctly the perceue to propozcion and making of the, as therbi to know thone well from the other. Wherefore if they shold rashely haue rushed in vpon them, and euery man runne at aduenture to take them all at ones, they might of reason somewhat haue doutted (least as it oftentimes happeneth) among so many some might haue chanced to escape, and he most specially for whome they chieflye came: sith comonly such as be in greatestt hazzard, wyl sonest thiste for theymselues.

C Thus whither it was their owne deuise, or that Judas put it first into theyr heades, so ordered they this wply dysste, that the traytour shoulde goe for messe, by whose embracing and kisse, our lozde might bee marked, that whan they had all ones well vewyrd hym, they myght all lay handes vpon him at ones, and so shoulde it be the lesse daunger, though after any of the reste escaped thein.

D Then had the Traytour giuen them a token, saieng, whomsoeuer I shall kisse, he it is, holde him fast, and carpe him warely.

Loe what an aryce byngeth a man vnto: had it not ben ynough for the thou vile wretched traitour, by the priuie token of a kisse to betray thine owne dere maister, (who had so lightly exalted the to the rowms of an Appostle) into the handes of such cursed captyses, but that thou muste take so much care therwithal, to haue hym wel and warely caried, for feare after he were taken, hee might scape from thiem againe: Thou werte hired but to deliuer hym, and other appointed, to take hym, to kepe hym, and to bring hym to hys iudgement: And thou yet as though thou haddest not done wretchedly ynough for thine owne parte, medlest with the souldiers offices to: and as though the wicked officers that sent thein had not gyuen them sufficient charge, much neded had they hardly of such a circumspect merchaunt as thou arte, to warne and giue them instruction of thine owne heade beside, that whan they had ones gotten hym, they shoulde be well ware howe they carped hym. What werte thou afraide, least whan thou haddest archieued thy mischieuous purpose in deliueringe Chryste vnto those Kuffins, if by the shouldiers negligence Chryste eyther shoulde haue slipped away ere they were ware, or by force be taken from theym. Wawgre their teeth, the thirtty grotes the wo:shipful reward of thine heinous offence, shoulde not haue bene truelpe paide the: Yes yes I warraunt thee full surely shoulde they haue ben paide the. But as glad as thou arte nowe to haue them, as desirous wilt thou be againe to be rydde of them, whan thou ones hast them, howbeit in the meane while shalt thou wo:ke a feate, which though it shall be paynesfull to thy maister, and dampnable to thy selfe, shall be neuer thelesse to a great many right holesome and profitable.

Antecedebat eos, & appropinquauit Iesu ut oscularetur eum. Et quum venisset, statim accessit ad eum, et ait, Rabbi, Aue Rabbi, et osculatus est eum, dixit ei Iesus, Amice ad quid venisti: Iuda osculo filium bonis tuis tradidit.

Then went Judas befoze them, and appoched nere vnto Iesus to kysse him, and when he was come, straight wayes. Pleasid he vnto hym and sayd. Maister, good morow maister: and kised hym. Iesus sayd vnto him, my frende wherto art thou comen? Judas doest thou betray the sonne of man with a kisse?

Albeit Judas of truthe (as the history telleth vs) went befoze thys company, yet doth he further in an other sence signify, that whereas there be many parteners of one euil act, he that comitteth it hauing cause to forbeare it, is in the syght of god accompted the wo:st of all his felowes.

Et appropinquauit ei, ut oscularetur eum. Et quum venisset, statim accessit ad eum, et ait Rabbi, Aue Rabbi & osculatus

And he dzeiwe nere to kisse hym. And when he was come, by and by wente he vnto him and sayde Maister, good moꝛrowe maister and kissed hym.

So doe they approche vnto Chryste, so doe they salute him, so doe they call him maister and so doe they kisse him also, that pꝛeceding to be Chrystes disciples, and in apparaunce shewing themselfes to pꝛofesse hys religyon: Yet in verye deepe doe by craft and subtelty their vitermost deuoure clerely to ouerthrowe it. So doe they salute Chryste as theyze maister, that call hym maister, and regard not hys commaundementes. So doe those pꝛiestes lykewylle kisse hym, which cōsecrate the holy body of chryst, and afterwarde by false doctrine and euill example of liuing, kylle Chrystes membyres, that is to witte the soules of chrysten men. So doe those laye men salute and kisse Chryste to, which woulde be compted foꝛ good and deuoute persons, foꝛ that contrary to the long continued custome and guise of al chrysten dome, they doe now in these later daies (lyke good holy fathers) without anye iust ground, in dispite and repproche of the whole chatholyke church (and therfoꝛe not without their greuous offence to godwarde) by the setting on of euyll pꝛiestes, not alonely themselfes receue the blessed body and blood of Chryste vnder bothe kyndes, (which thyng yet myght somewhat be bozne wythall) but condempne all otheꝛ that receue the same body and blood but vnder one kynd onely: whych is as much to saue as they condempne all Chrysten people that haue ben so many yeres in all partes of the woꝛlde, excepte themselfes alone.

And albeit they frowardly mayntayne that the laitee ought to receue both kyndes, yet as foꝛ the thing of the sacramēt, the body and blood of Chryst I meane, that doe the mosse part of theim aswell lay men as pꝛiestes, from euyther kynde clerely take awaye, leauing no moze therein but the bare names of hys body and blood alone. Add in this behalf are these folke, not much vnlike to Pilates souldiers, who in dirision of chryste vpon theire knees, saluted him kyng of Jewes. Foꝛ euen so fare they also, that wyth reuerence kneeling vpon theire knees, name the sacrament of the aulter the boode and blood of Chryst, whereas they belieue neyther nother to be there, no moze than Pilates me beleued him to be a kyng.

Merely all these whome I haue here rehearsed you, doe in theire saluacion and false traitterous kysse, plainly play vs the traitour Judasles part.

But now as these folke playe Judasles parte, longe after he is gone, so dyd Joas in a figure playe hys parte, longe befoꝛe he came: who (as it is wyrtten in the .xx. chapyter of the seconde booke of 2. Regum. 20.) while he thus saluted Amasas; God speede you myne owne good byoꝛther, and wyth his ryght hande lounglype tooke hym by the chyrne as though he woulde haue kyssed hym, pꝛiuelye dzeiwe out a sweorde therewhyles vnto wares vnto the totheꝛ, wherewith at a stroke thꝛough both hys spdes he strake hi stark deade at ones. And a god while afoꝛe thys, had he by a lyke trayne murdered Abner. But afterwarde as reason was being slayne hymselfe, he receued hys false rewarde foꝛ that wretched trayterours guyle.

Thys Judas folowed the sayd Joas oute ryght, whither ye consyder the estate of hys parson or his mpfcheuous dyfte, or the vengeaunce of Godde, and the myserable ende of the both, sauing that Judas in euerye point to too farre exceeded Joas. Foꝛ as Joas was in great fauour wyth hys pꝛynce, so was Judas, and in muche moze, and wyth a myghtyer pꝛynce to. And as Joas slew hys frende Amasas, so Judas slew Ihesus a farre greater frende, and therto wythall hys mosse louing mayster. And as Joas kylled Amasas vpon malice and ambicion, because it was tolde him that amasas was lyke to growe in moze estimation wyth hys pꝛynce than he, so Judas thꝛough couerpyce of wretched woꝛldely wyning, foꝛ a small somme of money, trayterously deliuered hys owne mayster to deathe. And therfoꝛe as hys trespas was a great deale moze heynous, so was the manoure of hys well deseruyd ende, muche moze pyteous and lamentable.

Foꝛ wheras Joas was slate by an other Judas wyth his own handes most wretchedly honged himselfe. But in the traitterous contriuing of mischiefe, were thabhorrible enterpyfes of the both not much vnlike, sith as Joas familiarly speaking to Amasas and pꝛetendyng frendely to kisse him, shamefully slew him, so cae Judas gentely to Chryst, saluted him reuerently, and kissed him louingly, wheras noughtels minded this curted

A cursed captiue all the while, but how to deliuer his deare maister to death.

¶ Neuerthelesse though Joas by suche colourd amity deceiued Amasas, yet could not Judas so deceiue Christ, who at his coming kindly receiued hym, heard him salute him, refused not to be kissed of him, and as pryncipally as he was of all his detestable treason, yet for a while so vsed he himselfe, as if he had knowen nothing thereof at all. And whye did he this trow ye? was it for that he would teache vs to counterfaite and dissimull, and like crafty worldly folke to auoyde one wylpe dysste by an other? No no he ment nothing so, but rather to giue vs a lesson patiently and mekely to suffre all wronges and false contriued traines, & not to scozne and rage, not to couet to be reuenged, not by euil language vttered againe to ease our shrewde stomackes, nor to take any vaine delight deceptively to beguile our enemy, but against craft and falschode to vse vpright dealing, and by goodnes to maister euill, and with sweete and softer wordes, to labour by all meanes possible bothe in time and out of time, to make good men of badde, so that if any man be incurable diseased, he haue none occasion to impute it to any negligence on our behalf, but to the outrage of his own mischeuous disease.

So Christ like a most gracious phisicion proued both these ways to cure the traytour Judas. And first beginnynge with gentlenes: My frend (quoth he) for what purpose comest thou?

Now albeit the traitour at this word frend, somewhat began to stagger, as he that vpon the remembrance of his hygh treason, feared that by the name of frend, Christ soze charge him with his wretched mortall malice, yet on the tother side, as commonly euill disposed persons be euer in good hope still to be vnknowen, this mad blinde wretche trusted, for all he had so ofte by experience perceiued, that Christe partly knewe mennes thoughtes, and that hys owne treason so, was metely wel tolued, at the supper, yet this madde sonde foole I say soze getting all together, was euer moze in good hope that Christe little wist his intent. But forasmuch as nothing coulde be moze harmefull vnto him, than to be still fondely sedde vpon such vaine hope (for it was the thing in dede that moste hyndered his amendement) Christe of his goodnes wold no lenger suffer him to concee sonde comfozt in trust that he nothing wist of his false dealing, but streightwaies sharply added therunto: Judas dost thou betray the sonne of man with a kisse?

¶ Here called he him by hys name as he was wonte to doe, to the intent vpon remembrance of olde amity, the traitours harte might haue relented and fallen to repentaunce, hys treason also openly layed he to his charge, & while he might perceiue it was not vnknowen, he shold neuer be ashamed to confesse his faulte.ouer this the traitour shamefull hypocrasie did he bitterly touch, in these wordes: Dost thou betraye the sonne of man with a kisse?

Among all sortes of mischiese, none can there lightly be sownden moze odious vnto god, than when we abuse thinges that be of their owne nature good, and turne them contrariwise to serue vs in our lewdenes. And for this consideractio dothe God much mislike lieng, for that the wordes which wer by him ordeined truely to expresse our myndes by, wee falsly pernerre to a quite contrary vse, in which sort and manour doth he greuously displease God also, that misurneth those lawes that were deuised to defend men from wrong, to be instruments to wrong men by.

Christe therfore checked and controuled Judas for this detestable kind of offence, where he sayd: Judas dost thou betraye the sonne of man with a kisse?

¶ Either be thou such as thou wouldest be taken for, or plainly shewe thy selfe as thou arte in dede? For who so vnder the colour of frendshippe woozkeheth an vnfrendely parte, doubleth wretchedly hys owne offence thereby. Was it not ynough for the than Judas to betraye the sonne of man, the sonne of that man forsoth I meane, though whose default all mankind had ben vtterlye losse for euer, had not thys same sonne of man, whome thou deuilest to destroy, redeemed al those that be willing to be sauid? Was it not ynough for the I saye to betraye this sonne of man, but thou must betraye him with a kisse to, and so make the serue the to work thy treason by, which was first inuented to be an assured token of dere loue and charity? I doe not so much blame this compaigne here which by forcible meanes openly set vpon me, as I doe the Judas which with a traitorous kisse dost vnto these rude ruffins thus vnkindly betraye me.

¶ Nowe

A how when Christ saw no maner of repentance in this traytour, to declare that he had much rather talke with hys open enemies, than a priuie aduersary, and therewith to cause the traytour to perceiue, howe little he passed vpon all hys deuilthe deuyces, turned straght from hym, & vnarmed as he was, furth went he vnto thys armed bande. For thus sayth the ghospel.

” Iesus itaque sciens omnia que futura erant super eum, ” processit & dixit eis: Quem queritis? Responderunt ei, ” Iesum Nazarenum. Dixit eis Iesus: Ego sum. Stabat
 ” autem et Iudas qui tradidit eum cum ipsis, ut ergo ” dixit eis Iesus: Ego sum, abierunt retrorsum & ce- ” ciderunt in terram.

When Iesus knowing all that should betyde hym, went furth and sayde vnto them: Whose seke ye? to whome they aunswered, Iesus of Nazareth. Iesus sayde vnto them: I am he. And with the stroke Judas that betrayed hym. And as soone as Iesus had once sayde I am he, they went backward and fell down vpon the grounde.

Sweete sauoure Christe, thou that were latelpe so soze afrapde, and lping prostrate vpon the grounde in most lamentable maner with a bloody swerte, biddest humbly pray vnto thy father to take away the cuppe of thy bitter passion, arte thou nowe sodapnelly so cleane changed, that lyke a gyaunt thou leapest out and topfullpe runnest for ward on thy iourney, and thus courageously goest to mete with those that seke to put thee to a paynefull passion, and of thine own mind discloest thy self vnto them, that confesse they come to seke thee, and for al that do not know thee? Whould god all faynte hearted folke would repaye hither, hit her I say to thys place, here maye they be sure to fynde sufficient matter of comfozte, when they shall fele theselues troubled with the extreme dreade of deathe. For as they thankfuller agonies with Christe, as they be in feare, in sorow, in heauinesse & in payne with hym, so shall they not sayle (if so be they heartely praye, and perseuer in the same, and therewithall wholly submit themselues to the will & pleasure of god) sensibly to feele comfozt and relief with him. With whose holpe spirite so shall they be recomfozted, & they shal manifestly perceiue the deseruittie of their old earthly heart by the dewe of his celestial grace to be right wel reformed: and by puttynge the wholesome crosse of Christe into the water of theyr sorow, the rememb2ance of deathe, which was of late so bitter vnto them, shall beare pleasaunte and sweete, and after theyr heauines, shall so lowe by and pleasure, and after theyr feare, strength and courage, pea and at length deathe too (which befoze they so soze abhorred) shall they greatly long for, counting it payne to liue, and gayne to dye, desyring to goe hence and to be with Christe.

When came Iesus euen hard vnto the and asked them this question.

Quem queritis? responderunt, Iesum Nazarenum.
Stabat autem et Iudas qui tradidit eum, cum ipsis.
Et dixit eis Iesus: Ego sum. Ut ergo dixit eis, Iesus, Ego sum, abierunt retrorsum, & ceciderunt in terra.

Whose seeke ye? They aunswered, Iesus of Nazareth: and Judas that betrayed him stode with them. Iesus said vnto them: I am he. And as soone as Iesus had sayde vnto them, I am he: they went backward and fell down on the grounde.

If anye man in his hearte befoze, the lesse esteemed Christe, by reason of the feare and anguillhe that was so latelpe in hym, now must thys manfull hardpe courage of Christe, recouer his estimation agayne, considering he so boldely aduentureth to god vnto all this armed rowe. And as sure as he is to be slayne by them (for he so reknewe all thynges that shoulde befall vnto hym) yet discouereth he himselfe vnto these wretches, albeit, they knowe hym not, and therby voluntarily betakerh hymself vnto the, as a sacrifice cruelly to be kylled of the. And truely this so todaye and so greata change, of reason ought much to be meruayled at in his blessed humanitie.

But now howe good and howe meruaylous an opinion and estimation of him, must this nedes engender in all good christen heartes, to see the power of god so wondrefully worke in his tender humane bodye? For what was the cause trowe you, that none of all those that so busily sought him, coude at that tyme knowe him, being so nere vnto them, & presently talking with them. He hadde openly preached in the temple, he had overthrown the bankers tables, & dyen uen them oute of the temple too, he had euermoze used to be conuersant abrode, he had confuted the Phariseis, and fully aunswered the Sadduceis, reproued the Scribes: and the captious question that Herodes souldiers mooued vnto him, by a discrete answer had he clerely

A auoyded, with .v. loanes of bzeadde he had scadde, by thousande persones, the sycke hadde he healed, and rayled the deadd, he hadde been in coumpayne of all sortes of people, Phariseys, Puplicanes, ryche, poore, good, badde, Jewes Samaritanes, and Gentiles. And now of all this noubmer was there not one that could discerne him, whyle he stode harde by theym, and spake vnto theym, neither by hys visage, nor yet by hys speche, as though the senders hadde of purpose prouyded suche messaungers, as amonge theym all that than came to fetch hym, there should not one be sent thither, that euer hadde seene hym before. Why was there none that hadde marked hym at the leaste wyle by Judasses talke with hym? or by hys enbrasing of hym? or by the kyffe he gaue him for a prouie token wherby he might be knowne? What hadde the Traytoure hym selfe that at the same tyme was there amonge them, so soone for gotten hym, when he hadde but a little before by a kyffe betrayed hym? Where of rose than this straunge and wondrous full chaunce?

The reason why none of theym all coulde knowe hym, was the selfe same that within a little whyle after, caused lykewyle, that byrill he reueled hym selfe, neyther Mary Magdalene when she sawe hym, nor neither nother of his twoo dysciples whyle they commoned with him, wylle what he was: but as they tooke him for some wayefayr ynge manne, so toke she hym but for a gardiner.

Finallye, if you will nedes learne howe it happened, that none of theym all hadde anye power to knowe hym, for all he was presente amonge theym, and talked with theym, it came ye may be sure of none other cause, but euen of the same that made as ye see here, that none of theym all was hable to stande on his sete, as long as he spake to them. For as soone as Iesus hadde sayde, I am he, they went backwarde and fell flatte to the grounde.

Here byd Chyffe berelye prouehim selfe to be that woerde of God, whiche much moze pearseth than anye double edged swoerde.

Some folke say in dede, the nature of lightening is such, that it will melt the swoerd and neuer hurt the scaberd. But verye true it is, that the onely voyce of Chyffe, without anye harme of theyr bodies so weakened theyr natural strengthe, that no power was there leste in theym to boare vp theyr lymmes with all.

Here telleth the Euangelist that Judas stode also with theym. For when he hearde Chyffe so playnely laye hys treason vnto hym, epyther for shame or for feare (for he wylle well ynough how fierce of nature Peter was) he drewe backe by and by, and retired to his coumpayne agayne. And why dothe the Euangeliste make mention of Judasses standinge amongest them? but to make vs vnderstande, that he lykewyle fell downe with theym. And surelye suche a wretche was Judas, that in all the coumpayne was there not a woorde, nor a moze woerthe to haue a falle. But herebye meant the Euangeliste to geue euerye man a generall warnyng, to take god hede what coumpayne he kepeth, for feare lest if he matche hymself with ieuill folke, with theym maye be fortune to fall: syth seldome chaunseth it, that whoso lyke a foole placeth hym selfe in a leakinge thyppe with such an after, by misfortune be cast into the sea, doothe scape alyue to lande, and all the reste be drownd.

None I thinke doubteth but that he whiche was hable to throwe them downe euerychone with one woerde, coulde as easelye haue geuen them so foze a fall, that none of theym all should euer haue been hable to ryle agayne. But Chyffe who gaue them this fall to make them knowe that moze coulde they not dooe vnto him, than he listed to permit them, lycensed them to ryle agayn, to doe that vnto him that it pleased him selfe, to suffer.

So when they were risen, he asked them agayne, whome seke ye? And they answered, Iesus of Nazareth.

By thys one poynte maye every man perceue, that by Chyffes cummyngs vnto theym they were so dismayed, so affronted and amased, that as it seemed they were almoste oute of theyr wittes. For hereof mighte they haue ben sure ynoughe, that at that tyme of nyghts, and in that place should they none find, but some, epyther of Chyffes owne dysciples, or at the leaste wyle some frende of hys, who woulde rather haue conueyghed theym anye waye elles, than haue

I haue conducted them where Iesus was. And yet dydde they lyke folles euen at the fyrste meetinge, fondelye blabbe out at once, vnto one whome they neyther wisse what he was, nor why he asked them that question, thefecte of all they errande: whiche in any wise shoulde haue been kepte close, vntill they hadde archteued theyr purpose. For as soone as he asked them, whome woulde ye haue, They answered and sayde, Iesus of Nazareth. Iesus answered agayne, I tolde ye that I am he, wherefore if you would haue me, lette these my dysciples departe. As who woulde say, if ye wolde haue me, sayng I am nowe come to yee, and telle ye my selfe who I am, nowe ye thus knowe me, why doe ye not strayghte wayes take me?

But of trueth so farre vnhable are ye to take me, except I geue you leaue, that (as ye haue by your fallng backwarde alreadye ryghte effectuallye proued) ye haue no power so muche as to stande whyle I doe but speake to you. Neuerthelesse, if all these thinges bee so sone so cleane oute of youre myndes, nowe once agayne I putte you in remembraunce, that I am Iesus of Nazareth. Wherefore, if you seeke me, suffer these (my dysciples) to departe.

Where Chryste here sayeth, lette these (my dysciples) departe, that he meant not thereby to aske leaue for the to goe, shewed he sufficiently I trow, by that he strake them so flatte to the grounde.

But otherwhyles happeth it among that they that go about a mischiteuous matter, bee not contented to doe one mischiese alone, but of theyr owne vngacious dyspositions, commonlye couerte to adde moze thereto, than the busynesse they haue in hande of any necessitie requirerth. And some also that helpe for the other mennes shamefull enterpryses, be so forward and so moze than nedeth trusteth therein, that rather than leaue any vngacious acte vndone that they are appointed vnto, they will putte some what moze to it of theyr owne beades helyde. Sothe whiche sortes of folke dothe Chryste here prouelye touche, where he sayth, if ye woulde haue me, suffer these my dysciples to depart. If it be my bloude that the Wysshoppes, the Scrybes, the Phariseis, and thaucientes of the people do so soze chryst for, loe at poure fyrst seekinge was I readie to meete you: and where you knewe me not, I disclosed my selfe vnto you: whyle ye laye on the grounde, I stoode harde by you: nowe you are risen, here am I presente for you to take me. And finally which the traytour coulde neuer haue done, here deliuer I my selfe into your handes, to thende neyther you nor they shal thinke that (as though you hadde not done lewdely enough to contriue my death) nedes must ye shedde their bloude too. For whiche cause if ye seeke me (sayde he) lette these (my dysciples) departe.

He hadde them lette them goe: but mangre theyr heartes he wroughte to haue it so. And whyle they were busye to haue caughte them, he caused hys dysciples to flee: and so preferuynge them all, clearlye disappointed all those captiues purpose. For declaracion of whiche effecte to folowe, these wordes spake he befoze hande vnto them: Lette these (my dysciples) departe: whereby this his owne sayng also was verified. Of all those thou gauest me haue I not lost one.

These wordes of Chryste which the Euangelyste here mencioneth, were those that Chryste spake vnto hys father the same nighte at his maundyng. Holy father saue them for thy names sake whom thou hast geuen vnto me. And a little after, I haue kepte safe all that thou gauest me, and none of them hath perished but the sonne of perdition, whereby the scripture is fulfilled.

Here loe Chryste prophycyng that his disciples shoulde be saued harmelesse althoughe him selfe were taken, foreshewed thereby that he and none els preserued them. By reason whereof of doothe the Euangelyste putte the same in the readers remembraunce, to let them wytte, that albeit Chryste in this place sayd vnto these folke, suffer these my disciples to departe. Him selfe for all that by his prouente power, had made open the waye for them to scape.

That place of scripture that foresheweth the destruction of Judas, is by the waye of prayour prophycied in the hundzeth and eight Psalm of David in this maner. Lette his dayes be thortned and another take his rounge. These wordes though they were foreshewen

S. J. spoken

A spoken so many yeres before of h<sup>e</sup> tray-tour Judas, yet vntill Ch<sup>r</sup>ist so taught vs, and the dede selfe after compared with the sayde woordes so proued the same, whither any man elles saue only he that spake theim did euer till that time so vnderstande theim, I cannot surely tell. For it foloweth not that euerye thing that one prophete foresa-feeth, is forescen of all the rest besyde: lyth the spirite of prophete is to Prophetes prop<sup>r</sup>tioned by measure. And and further of this opinion am I, that no man hath so cleare vnderstanding of holy scripture in all places, but that

B as yet there are many hidde misteries remayning vnperceiued therein, such as concerne either Antech<sup>r</sup>ystes tyme or the day of iudgement. Which albeit they are for the meane while vnkno-wen, Helias yet at his cumynge a-gayne, shall at laste openly reuele.
Wherefore as the apostle spake of the wisdomme of God, so maye I of holye wryte (wherein God hath layde bype and hydden greates heapes of his wis-dome) right well crye oute and saye:

Rom. II.

C Wh<sup>e</sup> the depth of the merueilous highe wisdomme and knowledg of god. How farre be the iudgements of god aboue the capacite of mannes witte: and how vnsearcheable be his wayes. And yet for all this doe there in euery corner nowe a dayes still starte by amongest vs, as it wer swarmes of waspes or hoznettes which of a certayne pride call theimselfes as Saynte Hierome tearmeth theim Antodidactons that is to wit, of theimselfes learned without any mannes teaching, and boast likewise that withoute the Commentaries of the olde doctoures, they haue founde all those poyntes open playne and easie, whiche all the auncient fathers, menne of as excellent witte and no lesse learning than they, and ouer that all geuen to continuall studie, and touching the spirit of God (wher-of they as muche babble as they litle haue) as farre beyonde theim as they passed them in godlye liuinge, confessed to be right harde and comberous.

B But nowe these newe found diuines, that are thus foodaynely spzong bype of noughte, whiche woulde so sayne seeme to knowe all thinges, besydes that they vary from all those god-lye menne in the vnderstandynge of scripture, agree not within theimselfselues, neither in the p<sup>r</sup>incipall poynttes of Ch<sup>r</sup>ystes religion, and neuer thelesse euerye one of theim boldelye bearng folke in hand, that they haue spyd oute the truethe, as they putte other of like sort to rebuke and shame, so by other doe they take shame themselues. And as they altogether labour to destroye and ouerthrowe the whole catholike sayth, so are they all the hole rabble of them broughte to confusyon theimselfes: whose wretched and sorrowful enterpyles, God that dwelleth in heauen lowde laugheth to skorne: whom I mosse humblye beseeche, that he so laugh theim not to skorne, as he laugh at their eternall dampnacion, but inspire into their heartes his hole-some grace of repentance, whereby though they lyke vnch<sup>r</sup>istie prodigall childzen haue strayed too longe alas abrode, they may yet at length return from whence they came, vnto theyr mother the churche afresh, to the intent we and they together agreeynge in one trewe sayth of Ch<sup>r</sup>ist, and knitte in mutuall loue and charitie, maye as hys trewe members attayne vnto the glozpe of our capitayne and headde, whiche who soeuer hopeth to haue oute of thys bodie (the churche) and withoute the righte sayth, doeth with a bayne hope lewdly deceiue himselfe.

But nowe as I was aboute to tell you, that this prophete was meante by Judas, dydde Ch<sup>r</sup>ist somewhat geue warnynge afoze, and Judas by the murtherynge of hymselfe, dydde playnely declare it, and Peter afterwarde so expownded it, and all thapostles to: whiche at lengthe executed the same, when by lot they admitted Matthias to his rowme, so that then byd there in verry dede another take hys place. And to make the matter the cle-rer, (albeit byshoppes doe still from time to tyme succede into the Apostles places) yet into that number of the twelue, after Matthias was once chosen in Judas steede, was there neuer none taken in agayne: but thoffice of the Apostles being litle and litle ap-poynted vnto manys, bothe was tha-foresayde prophete fulfilled, and that holye number therewith fullpe at an ende. Wherefore whan Ch<sup>r</sup>ist said, suffer these my Disciples to departe, he desyred not leaue for theim to departe, but in a maner to be theim that he hymselfe lycensed his disciples so to dwe,

A dooe, to verifye that he hadde earffe spoken, ffather I haue kept those that thou gauest me, and nor one of them hath perished, but the sonne of perdition.

Here me thynketh it good some what to waye, howe effectuallye in these woordes Chyffe sozetolde two thynges so farre vnylike, as the desperate death of the Traytoure, and the good successe of the reste. For so certaynelye vydde he tell what should become of bothe parties, that he spake thereof, as of a thyng not to come, but rather passe alreadye: Those that thou gauest me (sayde he) theym haue I kepte.

Deperther were they saued harme-lesse by theyr owne strength, nor preferred by anye gentlenesse on the Jewes behalfe, nor escaped awaye for faulte of diligence in Platons menne, but I haue safelye kepte theym, and none of theym all hath miscaried but onelye the sonne of perdition. For of theym whome thou (O father) gauest me, was he verelye one. And I whyle he at my choosynge of hym, willyngly receyued me, sette hym at free libertie to become the child of god wyth the remenaunte that receyued me. But as soone as he of a couetous mynde fondelye betooke hymselfe vnto the deuill, and sozroke me, and falsly betrayinge me, refused to be saued by me, whyle he wente aboute to deliuer me, he fell to be the sonne of perdition. And thus lyke a wretched wretchedly cast he himselfe away.

And so well assured was Chyffe, what ende thys Traytoure should haue, and so vndoabledy shewed he that he should come to naughte, that he playnelye sayde, he was alreadye losse. This notwithstandinge, all the whyle Chyffe was in takinge, still stood (with a full furious stomake) this wretched Traytoure, amongest those that tooke hym as theyr headde capitayne and banner bearer, tryumphing of likelhode and reioysinge to beholde, what perill his own fellowes and his maister were in. And I verelye thynke he looked for none other, but to haue hadde theym taken and slayne euerye chone. For suche is the madde naughtye nature of vngreatfull folke, that whome they haue once vniustlye deatte wyth, those woulde they gladdelye haue ridde oute of the way: so soze dooth theyr sinnefull woode ded conscience dreade the reproche of theyr vnkynde dealynge. Thus was this Traytoure full gladd, whyle he hoped to haue hadde all his fellowes in hoide at once, and lyke a foole casse no perilles of himselfe at all: nothing lesse mistrustinge than that should come after the dreadefull sentence of God should lighte vpon hym, so that he with his owne handes should mosse horriblye hang himselfe.

Here haue I occasyon to lamente and bewaile, the blyndenesse of oure miserable mortall nature. For many tymes whyle we are in mosse trouble and feare, though we knowe it not, be we in mosse suretie. And contrary wise, ofte tymes whyle we reckon our selues surest and make mosse merpe, than vntwares stealeth death euen so daynelye on vs. All the Apostles saue Judas were very soze afrayde: reckoning to haue been carryed awaye, and putte to death with Chyffe. And yet were they all in case safelye to escape: wheras Judas on thother syde which nothing feared at all, but tooke a speciall pleasure to see them so aspyghted, losse hys lyfe for ever and that in fewe howres after.

A cruell deliighte it is and very vn- naturall, to reioyce and take comforte at others woe and miserye. Neuer the moze cause hath any manne to reioyce or to accoumpte hys lucke the better, for hauinge power vpon anye bodies lyfe or death, as the Traytoure troved he hadde, when he had gotten this benede of souldiours vnto hym. Sith of this may every man be righte sure, that whom so euer he slayeth, by death shall he him folowe. Yea and so vncertayne is the howze of death, that the partie that so boldelye boasteth to dispatche another syde, may fortane for all that to goe before hymselfe: as it here fared by Judas, who deliuered Chyffe to the Jewes to be put to death, and yet did he selfe miserablye murder himselfe.

A heauy & dredeful president for the hole world to beware, y no man recke himselfe free from Goddes vengeance, that without all feare of God presump- teouslye attempteth myschiefe, neuer taking anye recourse thereof. For all creatures dooe agree to wooske with their creatour, to chastice and punish the euyl. The apert is ready, with noy-

A some and euill breathes to infect and poyson theym, the water with waues to drowne them, the mountaynes to ouerwhelme them, the vales to rple vp against them, the earth to gape and open vnder them, hell sodainlye to swa-lowe them downe, and there the deuill heblong depe to plunge the in flaming fyre pittes, that shall continue for e-uer. And al this whyle dweth god alone preferue this sely wretched man for al he hath too folwe foraken him. But he that so foloweth this stubbern stiffe necked Judas, that after grace so often offered, and as ofte agayne refused, God at length determineth to offer it him no more, this man is vndoubtedly in a very miserable case, thys man I saie in howe good plyghte soeuer he fondly weneth himself to be, and seme he to see neuer so hygh in the ayre, yet swalloweth he in dede full lowe in all forowe and wretchednes.

Wherefore let vs make our papper vnto our most pitiful sauour Christ, not eche one for hymselfe alone, but euery man for other too, that we folow not the example of the obstinate tray-tour Judas, but without delaye gladly embracing goddes grace whan it is offered vs, may thzough our owne repentance and his mercye, be renued afreshe to attayne his endlesse glozy.

De amputata Malchi auricula.

Of the cutting of Marchus care.

Albeit the Apostles, whan they firste heard Christ tell theym befoze, of the thinges whiche they now sawe themselues, wer therat full fory and sadde, yet much lesse did it grieue them then, than now, whan they presently be-helde them with theyr owne eyes. For allone as they espyed so manye come vpon them at once, and openly sayde they soughte Iesus of Nazareth, no longer could they stand in doubt, but that they so sought for him purpofelye to apprehend him. And therupon perceiuyn what was like to ensue thereon, sundry matters as in such a sodain trye to vary soze perplexed them. First the earnest care they had for theyr dere beloued maister: ouer this, the dreade they stood in what might fall on them selues: and last of all, the shame they hadde to breake their bolde boaste and promyse, where euerye one pccelselye sayd, he would neuer forsake his master, no not to dye therfoze.

Thus were theyr myndes with dy-uers perplexities diuerslye distracted. C For as the loue of theyr maister moued them to auoyde, so the feare of the selues willed them to flee. And as the dreade of death draue them fast away, so bidde the shame to breake their pro-myse, perswade them still to tarpe. A-gayne they ryghte well remembred, howe Christ had befoze time charged, that none of them for his owne defece shoulde carpe neither sticke nor staffe: whereas nowe the same night he gaue a contrarpe commaundemente, that whoso lacked a sweord shoulde sell hys coate to buye hym one withall, and all wer it so, that they being but eleuen in number, & thereto so destitute of weapons, that saue onely two of them neuer a one had anye aboute him, except happely some knyfe to cutte his meate withall, wer soze afflighted to see such a sorte of the Jewes besydes the Romaine soldiores, all so well armed stande there so thicke thzonging together about them, yet allone as they bethought them, that when they had said vnto Christ, lo here are two swozdes, Christe answered they are enough, they not vnderstanding what was the mysticall meaning of the matter, so dagnely asked Christ all in hast, whither they shoulde defend him by swozd, saying: Domine si percussimus gladio? Lord shall we stryke with the swozd: But Peter for the scruent affection he bare to his maister, befoze he had his answer drewe out his swozd, and stryking at the bishoppes seruaunte, cutte of hys right eare clene: yfther for that it was his chaunce to stande there nexte vnto him, or elles because among theym all ther was none so busy a braggart. And oute of question it appeareth that he was some very lewde losell, for the Euangelistes wyte of him, that he was seruaunt to the bishop who was hygh Priest or Prince of the Priestes. And commonly as Iuuenall sayth: Great mennes howses bee well stozed with saluys malaperte mar chauntes. And men learne by their owne experyence, that in euery countrey noble mennes seruantes be staliel and much moze extreme, than are theyr Lordes themselues.

Howe to let vs knowe, that this sellowe bare some rule with the bishop, & toke therfoze somwhat the moze vpon hym, Sainte John immediatly after addeth his name to saynting: Erat nomen seruo

A seruo Malchus. This seruantes name was Malchus: whiche thyng theuangeliste seldome vseth, withoute it bee for some purpose. And thereupon thynke I that this Iauell that so fiercely rushed in among them, sette Peter in such a heate, that he fyrst beganne with hym, and so would stoutely haue proceeded further, had not Chyrist stayde hys bolde courageous stomake, ere that he wet to farre. Who by and by (as he that came not to auoyde death, but to suffer it, and if he had been otherwyse mynded, yet lyttle neede had of any suche ayde) both tempered the reselue of hys Apostles, and repproued Peters outrageous zeale, and also ressed the vyle wretche hys eare agayne. For the playner declaracion wherof, first answered he his other disciples to theyr demaundes, saying: sinite vs huc, ab huc paulisper sinite: Lette them alone yet, a litle whyle lenger suffer them. For I that with one word ouerthrewe them all at once, was as ye see contente for all that to let them ryse agayne, and so for thys once to worke theyr willes vpon me. As yet than those whom I myselfe doe suffer, them suffer ye also. And the tyme is almoste come, in whiche I shall no more suffer them, to haue anye power vpon me. And now in the meane while, neither neede haue I none of your helpe at all.

This was all hys aunswere loe, that he made vnto the rest, suffer them yet a while. But seuerally turning vnto Peter: mitte gladium in locum suum. Put vp (quod he) thy sword into his place, as though he would say, I will not be defended by sword. And suche a state haue I chosen thæ vnto, that I will not hane thæ fight with this kynd of sword, but with the sword of goddes word. Let this materiall sword therfore, be put vp into his place, that is to witte into the handes of tempozall pynces, as into hys skaberde agayne to punythe malcfactours withal. He that be apostles of my flocke haue another maner of sword than this pardie, muche more terrible than is any sword made of yron or steele. For by that sword, whatsoener euill persone is once cast oute of the church, that is to bee vnderstanden as a rotten member cut of from my mysticall body, is deliuered sometyme to the deuylles handes only to chastrice his fleshy, to thæd his soule may be saued, if so be there remaine any hope of amendment in him, & that he may be graffed and knitte into my body afresh. And other whyles if he be so desperatly diseased, that he be past all recovery, than for feare thinsfection of him might happely hurt the whole & sounde, is he perpetuallye condemned vnto the inuisible death of his soule also. And of truely so loath am I to haue ye fyghte, with this tempozall sword (the metest skaberde for whiche, marke well what I sape vnto ye, are the secular Iustices) that I coulde not aduise you to occupye the spirituall sword, (thuse wherof perteyneth to you alone) not very often neither: but valliantly bespyring your selfe with the sword of goddes word (the cut wherof like a lytle launssing kniffe may let out the soule corruption of the soule, and so wounde it to the great helpe and health thereof) as for the tother terrible and daungerous sword of excommunicacion, that woulde I haue you alwayes kepe with in the skaberde of mercye and pittie, till an vrgent and wonderous necessarye cause, enforce you to drawe it oute.

Thus wheras to the remenant of hys apostles he spake not passing two wordes or thre, eyther for that they were meke milde of spirite, or not so hottie as Peter was, Peters fierce onbrydeled braydes he calmed and quyeted with a farre lenger processe. For he byd not a lonelye bid him put vp his sword, but tolde him also the cause why he mistyked his zeale, how well soeuer he meant therein.

Calicem quæ dedit mihi pater, non vis ut bibam illud Why wilt thou not that I that drink (quod he) of the cup that my father hath geuen me?

Chyrist had long befoze shewed his apostles that he must goe to Hierusalem, and suffer muche woe by thancientes and the Scrybes and the Prynces of the priestes, and in thend be slayn and rise the third day agayn. And Peter taking him aside, began to rebuke hym in thys wyse: God forbiddes matffer it should so face with thæ: there shall no such thing come to thæ. Who turned aboute vnto Peter, and said: Get thee hence behynd me Satan, thou hast no taste in godlye matters.

Here lo may ye see, how sharply Chyrist repproued Peter, to whom a litle befoze, when he cofessed hym to be the sonne of god, he had saide, Blessed art thou Symon y sonne of Jonas: for flesh & blud
 A. A. liij. hath

It hath not reueled this vnto thee, but my father that is in heauen. And I saye to thee, that thou arte a stone, and vpon this stone shall I builde my churche, and heil gates shall not preuaile against it. And vnto thee will I geue the keyes of heauen, and whatsoeuer thou shalt binde vpon earth, shall be bound likewise in heauen, and so forth.

And here he casteth hym of in a manner, and maketh hym goe behynd him, and playnely sheweth hym that he hindereth hym in his purpose, and calleth hym Satan, and telleth hym that he saoureth not godlye thynges but all worldly.

But why dydde he all this? Marpe because he dyscounsayled hym to take this death vpon hym, whiche he than tolde him that nedes must he suffer, and that by his own will it was resolutely so determined. And therefore woulde he that they shoulde not onely not lette hym therfro, but also folowe hym by the same waye theymselues. For who so will come after me (saythe he) muste forsake hymselfe, take vpe his crosse and folowe me.

Luke. 9.

And besydes all this he goeth furth further and declareth, that if any man whan nede requirerth, will refuse to go to death with hym, he shall not auoyde bedely death thereby, but fall from that to a worse. And contrarpe wise who so euer will not speke to bestowe his lyfe for me (saythe he) he shall not lese his lyfe at all but chaunge it for a better. For he that will saue his lyfe shall lese it, and he that will lese his lyfe for my sake shall fynde it. And what good geatteth a man, if he wyne the whole worlde, and leseth his soule withall?

Luke. 9.

Mathe. 10.

What exchange will any man make for his soule? For the sonne of manne shall come with his Angelles in the gloype of his father, and than shall he rewarde every man accordyng to his dooinges.

I tarpe a lytle longer vpon this place than peradventure nedeth. But who is there trowe pe that woulde not with these wordes of Chyriste, beyng so soze, so bytinge, and agayne so effectually puttynge vs in hope of euerlastynge lyfe, he moued somewhat to dysgrelle from his matter. Howebeit as concerning this present place, by these wordes of Chyriste we see well, howe secretly Peter was here admonished, to beware that he abused his zeale to the hyndering of Chyristes death no moze.

And yet once agayne loe, as he than didde all his possible endeour by wordes, to counsaile him to the contrarpe, so nowe laboured he as faste by mayne force and violence vpon the lyke zeale to defende him therfro.

All this notwithstanding, Chyriste, because the faulte that Peter dydde, came of a good affection, and also in as muche as goynge to his passyon, he demeaned hymselfe in all poyntes humblye, woulde not to sherpely reprove hym therfore: but first by reason corrected hym, and after by tellinge hym his faulte, and at last declared also vnto hym, that if he hym selfe were not wplyng to dye, lytle neded he to be defended eyther by hym or anye other mannes ayde at all. such his father wold not saye, if he woulde desyre it of him to sende hym at his neede a myghty stronge vnuincible armie of Angells from heauen, agaynst those scelye slaues that were come nowe to take him.

So first of all (as I tolde you) dyd Chyriste reuelle the feruent desyre that Peter hadde to stryke, and shewed him the reason why.

Calicem quem dedit mihi pater, non vis ut bibam illum?

What wilt thou not (quod he) that I shall drynke of the cuppe which my father hath geuen me?

All my lyfe hitherto hath been a patrone of obedience, and a saumple of humilitie. Was there euer anye thing that I haue epyther oftener or moze earnestlye taughte pe, than to bee obediente to your rewlars, to honour your parentes, to yelde vnto Caesar, what belongeth vnto hym, and to God like wise whatsoeuer is deweto hym: And nowe that I am euen at the laste poynt of my busynesse, and here shall make an ende of altogether, this godly wonderful woork that I haue bene so longe aboute, wouidest thou haue me oute of hande to marre it euer whytte, and refuse the cuppe that my father thus offereth me, and so the sonne of man to bee dysobedient vnto God his father?

After this tolde he Peter, that he had doone verpe euill to stryke with the sweorde: and that declared he also by the example of the Civile lawes, who saythe,

Who so taketh a sweorde, with the sweorde shall he be slayne.

For by the Civile lawes of the Romanes, vnder whiche the Iewes at the same tyme liued, who so euer withoute sufficient authoritie were spied so muche as to haue a sweorde about him to murder anye manne with, was in a maner in as euill case as he that had murdered one in dede. In howe muche more daunger is he than that both draweth hys sweorde and strykeh wpyth it two? And beyng so amased and in suche feare as Peter was, I can not well belieue he was so circumspecte, that of purpose he forbare to stryke at Malchus headde, and onely smote at hys eare, because he mynded not to kill hym, but onely to make him astrayde.

Here if anye manns will perhappes saye, that one may lawfully euen with the sweorde, saue an innocent and good manne, from the vpolente handes of myschieuous raging ruffians, the discussinge of that matter, woulde require a longer procelle, than were conuenient for thys place. But certaynlye, though Peter tender louynge affection towarde Chyyste, caused hys offence to bee somewhat the more excusable, yet that he hadde no lawefull authoritie to fyghte for hym, sufficientely appeareth, by that Chyyste hadde before tyme so precyely warned hym, that he shoulde in no wyse goe aboute to hynder hys death and passon, nor so much as with one word, and lesse than with anye kynde of vpolence.

Besydes thys, herewith daunted he Peters halfe courage too, by shewing hym playnely that of hys defence he had no nede at all.

An putas quia non possum rogare patrem meum, et exhibebit mihi modo plus quam duos decem millium angelorum.

Weneest thou (quod he) that I cannot calle vnto my father for helpe, and he will geue me further with aboue twelue legions of Angelles?

Of hys owne power here speaketh hee but litle: but of hys fathers fauoure towarde hym, thereof doothe he sayfullie talke. For syth he was goynge to his deathwarde, he woulde in no case greatelye auauance hymselfe, nor for that whyle openlye tell hym that he was in equall power with his father. But to haue it appere that he neded to be holpe neither at Peters hand, nor at none earthely creatures elles, he shewed hym that if he wisse but aske it, he shoulde not sayle to haue incontynente readye, sufficiente assistance of Angelles, from hys almyghtie father in heauen.

Why trowest thou (quod he) that I can not make requeste vnto my father, and he will sende me straght wayes more than twelue legions of Angelles?

As though he woulde saye: If this bee not ynoughe to make thee knowe that I haue no nede of thy helpe, that thou sawest me wpyth thine owne eyes by mye onelye worde, ouerthow all thys myghtye vnde, and yet neuer towched theyn, (agaynst whome if thou wouldest reckon thy selfe hable to defend me by thine owne myghte and strengthe, thou werte farre madde and muche to be lamented) yet at the leaste wyle, calle to thy remembrance est soones, whose sonne thou saydest I was, whan I asked you all thys question: Whome dooe you saye that I am? And thou by and by inspired by G D D, maddest answer vnto me agayne. Thou arte Chyyste the sonne of the liuyng God. Than syth thou knowest by hys true lacyon, that I am the sonne of God, and seepnge thou canst not bee ignorant, that euerye naturalle father will not sayle to helpe hys chyld, weneest thou that if I of myne owne choyce were not willynge to dye, my father in heauen woulde not be ready to helpe me?

What thynkest thou that if I wold require it of hym, I coulde not haue more than twelue legions of Angells? and that oute of hand by and by withoute anye further delaye? Agaynst so manye legions of Angelles, howe shoulde suche a seelye sorte of byle slaues and wretches as they bee, be hable so much as to stande on theyr sete, whan tenne tymes twelue legions of suche as they bee coude not endure to beholde of one Angell one angrye loke?

After this fell Chyyste in hand with the spytt point again, as wher in chieflye con-» Quomodo ergo implebuntur scripture, quia sic oportet tuis fieri?

» How shall the scriptures be fulfilled » than (sayd he) sith so must it nedes be?

The scriptures be full of prophetes concerning Chyestes death, and full are they in like maner of the miseries of his passion, and of mankindes redempcion which could neuer haue come to passe, had he not so suffred.

Howe lest Peter or any other at anye time after, might thus mutter secretlye with himselfe: Sir if thou canst as thou sayest, obteyne so manye legions of thy father, why dost thou not aske them? To this he sayd. How shall than y scriptures be fulfilled, sith it is behouable so to be. When seing by the scriptures thou dost so well perceiue, that this is thonly way determined by Goddes iustice & wisdom, to restore mankind agayne to the felicitie he is fallen fro, nowe if I shoulde heartelye desyre my father to preferue me from deathe, what shoulde I thereby elles doe, but labour myne own self, to hinder the same thing which I came hither for. And therefore to call C Angels out of heauen to assist me, what were that, but utterlye to debarre from heauen all mankynde for euer? For whose redempcion and restitution into this heauenly blisse, is the speciall cause of my cummyng. So that now fightest thou with thy sweoꝝd, not agaynst the wicked Jewes, but rather agaynst all mankynde, in asmuch as the scriptures thou wilt not suffer to be fulfilled, noꝝ me to dynke of the cuppe that my father hath geuen me, thzough whiche I being without spotte & wemme, myghte D pouрге and cleanse the fowle defozmed spottes of mannes nature.

But marke you here the merueylous myldnes of Chyest, which was not only content to stay Peter from striking, but also for our ensauple, to doe godd for euill, sette hand to his persecutours eare, that was stricken of, and restored it whole agayne.

No creature liuing is there I trowe in euery part so replenished with soule and lyfe, as the letter of holpe wꝛitte is full of spirituall miseries. For as we can touche no piece of the bodye, but it hath soule therein whiche geueth lyfe and sence thereto, be it neuer so small a porcion, so in all scrypture is there no hyꝛsoꝝy so grosse, (if I maye so name it) or so base, but that it is quickened with C some spirituall lyuely mystery. Wherfoze, in Malchus eare whiche Peters sweoꝝd cutte of, and by Chyestes holpe hande sette on agayne, we must not only consider the hysꝛoꝝy (and yet thereby may we learne many a wholesome lesson too) but deeper must we looke & be we besydes, the ghoselly fruitfull meaning therof pꝛiuely conteyned vnder the literal sense.

Malchus than whiche in the Hebrewe F tong signifiyeth that we call in englishe a kynge, doothe not withoute godd conuenience betoken reason vnto vs. For F reason in man ought to rule like a king and so rule doothe it in deede, whan submitting it self to the obedience of sayth, it serueth God, and hym whoso serueth most, ruleth lyke a kynge.

But this byshop with hys Pꝛiestes, the Phariseys, the Scribes, and thau C cientes of the people, that were wholye geue to lewde supersticions, which they had matched with the law of god vnder pꝛetence of holynesse, labouryng to defrope all godly vertue, and to ride out of the waye the authoꝝ of true religion, doe well signiſyfe and represent vnto vs C blasphemous Archheretikes with their complices, the teachers and ryngeladders of deuillish supersticion.

Than as often as mans reasonable soule, rebelling agaynst Chyestes true sayth, forsaketh Chyest, and betaketh it self to heresies, it becometh from thence furth that Arche heretikes bondslau, whose false errorres by the deuilles deceitful meanes it foloweth. Such a one loe kepeth still hys leste eare to heare D sinner heresies withal: but hys ryghte eare to heare the true sayth withal, that hath he betterly lost.

Per doe not al men alwayes this, bꝛō like meaning and entent, noꝝ yet woꝝketh it euer in euery man lyke effecte neither. For sometime of a mere set malice, do some folke fall to heresies. These mennes eares are not sodaynly cutte of at one stroke: but lyttle and lyttle in pꝛocesse of time, as the deuil powꝛeth in hys payson vpon the, doe they rotte and putrifye. And after y selfred partes are once congeled, than doth the hardenesse therof so stoppe vꝛype all the wayes, that no goodnes can after enter. These wyretches alas are seldome or neuer perfectly made whole agayn, sith these partes that y fretting cankar hath clearly eaten

A ten by, are bitterly percyshed for euer, so that nothynge remayneth in theym euer to be cured moze.

And the eare that was bypon an vndiscrete zeale, at one blowe sodaynlye stricken of, and fell downe to the grounde, betokeneth suche persones, as being ouercome with some sodeyne blynde affection, vnder the couloure of truethe, are caryed cleane therefro.

Some there are agayn, whom their owne good zeale deceiueth. Whereof Chryste speaketh thus: The tyme that come in whiche who so slauerh yee, shall thinke he dothe good seruice vnto God.

Joh. 16.

Whall thinke he dothe good seruice vnto God.

A figure of this sozte of folke, was the Apostle Saynt Paule.

Other are ther besyde, whiche hauing theyr heartes cumbered with worldly affections, lette theyr eares, beeynge once cut of from hearpyng the celestial doctrine, lie there still vpon the ground, whose miserable estate doth Chryste ful often pittie. And the eares that were eyther thozowe some hasty rashe motion or vnapyred zeale, so smitten of from the head, with his owne hand taketh he by from the ground, and with the same letteth them on fast agayne, and so maketh them mete to heare the true doctrine afreshe.

I wot right well that thold fathers, as one founde one thinge and some other an other, haue oute of thys one place by the gracious assistance of the holy goff, gathered many and vpuers misteries, all whiche, purpose I not here to rehearse for ouermuch discontinuing the proces of this stozye.

Dixit autem Iesus ad eos qui venerant, Principes sacerdotum & magistratus templi & seniores tanquam ad latronem existis cum gladius & sustibus comprehendere me, quum quotidie fuerim vobiscum in templo, & sedebam docens, et non me tenuistis, non extendistis manus in me: sed hec est hora vestra & potestas tenebrarum.

And Iesus sayde to the pynces of the Priestes, the officers of the temple, and the auncientes that came vnto hym: hither come ye with swoozdes & gleaues to take me lyke a thefe, whereas I was daylye in the temple amonge ye, and safe and taughte ye, and ye layde no handes vpon me. But this is your hower and the power of darkenesse.

These woordes sayde Chryste vnto the Pynces of the Priestes, the officers of the Temple, and thauncientes that came to take hym. But hereupon cryseth there among some menne a certayne doubte, for that the Euangelist Luke telleth, that Iesus spake these woordes to the chief Priestes, the officers of the Temple and thauncientes of the people, wheras the other Euangelistes in suche sozte dooe recyte the matter, that by theyr wyrtynge it appereth they sente a benche of souldyours, and some of theyr seruantes thither, and came not theymselues at all.

Thys doubte doe some menne asyle in this wyse: that Iesus in speakyng these woordes to theym whome they sente, spake it to theymselues, as Pynces vse to talke together by theyr Embassadoures, and ppyuate persones commonlye by theyr messengers. So what so euer we saye to the seruante that is sent vnto vs, whereof he must make agayne report to him that sent him, that saye we to his maister himselve.

Forsoothe for my parte, all be it I neuer a deale disalowe this aunswer, yet can I better lyke theyr opinion, which thynke that Chryst spake these woordes to the Pynces of the Priestes, the officers of the temple, and the auncientes of the people, presetly face to face. For Saynte Luke sayth not, that Chryste spake these woordes to all the Pynces of the Priestes, nor to all the officers of the Temple, nor to all the auncientes of the people, but to those of them onelye that were come to take hym. Wherby he semeth playnely to declare, that although by them all assembled together in counsaile, thys counpayne of souldours and their owne seruantes were sente in all theyr names to apprehend Chryst, yet came ther thither with them, some of euery sozte beside, as well of thauncientes, and Phariseys, as also of the Pynces of the Priestes. Whiche opinion throughlye agreeth wyth the woordes of Saynct Luke, and may stande well ynoughe wyth the saynges of all the other Euangelistes too. Wherefore Chryste in speakyng to the Pynces of the Priestes, the Phariseys and the auncientes of the people, gaue them a priuie warninge, that they shoulde not ascribethe taking of hym at that tyme to their owne power or pollicye, nor plentylye glozye, lyke folke that vnhappely haue

A haue good happe to dwe euill, as though they hadde wplyllye and craftelye coumpassed their matter: syth none of all theyz sonde controued deuyles; wherby they endeouored to suppress the trueth, coude neuer agaynst him haue anye thinge pzeuayled, but gods highe wisdom hadde prouyded and appoynted the tyme, in whych the Prince of this worlde (the deuill) shoulde ere he were ware, ryghteouslye lase mankynd (his gylefully gotten pray) euen while he moste laboured vnrigh- teouslye to kepe it.

Chyyst dyd also expressely tell them, that little reede had they to haue hyed the traytour, or to come thither with lanternes and torches by nighte, or so manye of theym together with such a bende of souldiours, to sette vpon him with swordes and gleues, seeing they might without their cost and charge, without any labour, without any bre- king of their slepe, and without anye weapon at all, easely ofte tymes haue raken him, while he late teaching open- ly in the temple among theim. And if they would boldlye bragge with them- selues, that they hadde circumspectly ordered their downges, and further- moze saie, that though Chyriste called it a thynge easie to be done, yet was it in dede very harde and comberous, and suche as coude neuer haue been brought to passe without much daun- ger of some tumult and vproare of the people, howe dangerous a matter that was to dwe, of late right well ap- peared at the rasynge of Lazare. For they had hadde experience after than once, that as well as the multitude loued Chyriste, and as much as they este- med him for his wondrousfull goodnes, those for all that that wente aboute to take him and kille hym, were so little afrayde of sustayning anye harme at theyz handes therfore, that hadde he not skaped through the myddest of the by his owne almyghtie power, they might see god likelihod, that in theyz mischiese the people woulde haue ta- ken their partes. So vnconstraunte is the common people, and so sone enclp- ned to euill.

And to conclude, howe little anye man should regarde the common peo- ples sauour, or contrary wise dreade theyz dyspleasure, that that folowed sone after well declared where allone as Chyrist was once apprehended, they cryed no faster befoze, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of our lord, Mat. 21. and Anna in the highest, than now in a fury they cryed out cleane contra- ry, A waye, awaye with him and cru- cifye him.

Wherby it is euident, that it came of God himselfe, that vntill that tyme, those which woulde so fayne haue ta- ken him, cast perilles where wer none at all, and causelesse quaked for feare, Psalm. 15. where neede was none to feare. But now as soone as the conuentent tyme was come, that by the payneful death of one man, all menne shoulde be rede- med to the ioyful blisse of the life euer- lasting, as many as vnfaynedlye despy- red it, these pieuiste wretched doltes thought, that they by their wply wits had wiilly wrought that thing, which the prouidence of almighty god, with- out whose soze knowledge not so much as a sparowe lighteth on the grounde, Mat. 10 hadde of his greete mercy from befoze ail time determined.

Whereto thewe howe farre they wer deceued, and to teache them moze ouer, that neither the traitours guyle, nor their own craftely contriued tra- nes, nor all the mightie the Romayne souldiers had, coude haue stode them in any stede, had he not been willinge thereto hymselfe, Chyriste sayde vnto theym: But this is poure howe, and the power of darkenesse. Which wor- des of his dwith the Euangelist saynte Math. 26 And all this (sayth he) was done to ac- complish that the prophetes had writ- ten.

All the Prophetes euerye where be full of Prophecies concerning Chyristes deathe. As where it is thus. To Clap. 51 deathe was he caried like a lambe, and of him in the sketes was ther heard no crye. In my handes and my fete made they diepe holes. These woundes had I in the house of those that loued me. Isa. 53 He was accounted in the noubre of wicked men, our diseases did he be- rely beare, and by his smarte were we healed. Throughe the sinfulnessse of my people, was he caried to his death. Clap. 52

The Prophetes in manye places playnellye foresawe Chyristes deathe and passyon, whose Prophecyes see- ing they could not but be fulfilled, it consequently foloweth, that the mat- ter dependd not vppon mannes de- termination, but rather that he who from Whereas here tofoze ye hated me deaddye, and therefore gladdely wold haue dispatched me, and mighte with muche lesse busynesse easely haue done it, hadde not the power of god restrayned you from it, yet all that whyle in the temple neither dydde you take me, nor once made offer to laye any hande vpon me. For soth because the time and hower was not yet come, whiche my father of his vnsearcheable wysedome, hadde by myne owne consente appoynted, and not anye constellation of the planets, nor youre subtile conueyghances neither. And will ye knowe when? Not synce Abrahams dayes, but from befoze the begynnyng of the worlde: syth from befoze all tyme ere euer Abraham was made, am I with the father. But after that our sauour woulde neyther suffer them to fyghte, nor to make anye manour resistauce, than lest they him all alone, and fledde away euerychone.

Albeit I haue ben ere this in some doubt with my selfe, when Chryst rose from hys prayoures to see his Apostles and founde them a sleepe, whether he went to them all in two sondrye places as they were leuered, or to those onely whome he hadde taken with him somewhat awaie from the rest, and placed nere vnto him, yet what I consider here these woordes of the Euangelyste that they all forsoke him and ran away, I can nowe no more doubt, but that he went to them all and found them all a slepe. For whereas they should haue waresly watched (as Chryst hadde so often warned them) and prayed also, for feare of fallynge into temptation, they throught theyr sleeping gaue the default occasion, whyle theyr myndes were waueryng and carelesse, to make them more enclined to fyghte or to flee, than to be contente to take all thynges with patience. Whereupon at lengthe they lefte him all alone, and got them clearelye from hym. Whereby were verifed both this sayinge of our sauour Chryste, This nighte shall ye all haue occasyon in me to fall and this prophete lykelye. I will stryke the shepheard and the shepe shall be scattered abrode.

Adolescens autem quidam sequebatur eum, ad mictus sindone super nudo. Et ille reiecta syn done, nudus per fugit ab eis.

And after Chryst, went there a yong manne, his bodie all bare saue onely for a linnen sheete that was cast aboute him: whiche he lefte behynde him, and all naked fledde away from them.

What this yonge manne was, it is not perfectlye knowen. Some thinkes it was Saynte James that was called our Lordes brother, and surnamed Iustus. Some other agayne reckoned it was Saint John the euangelist, whom oure Lozde euer aboue the reste of hys Apostles singularlye fauoured: who was as yet but yonge, as appeared by that he liued so many yeres after Chrystes death. For as testifeth Saynte Hierome, he dyed in the threecore and eyght yere after Chrystes passion.

Yet are there of the olde wyrters, & saye that this yonge man was none of the apostles, but a seruant of that house where Chryste kepte hys maundye that nighte. Whose mynde in that behalfe am I most moued to solow. For besides that my selfe thinketh it nothing likely, that an apostle woulde haue none other apparayle to couer his body with, but a bare linnen sheete, namely so lowe about hym,

I haue not translated this place as the latine coppye goeth, but as I iudge it shoulde be, because my graundfathers copy was for lacke of space sure neuer well corrected.

Math. 26:

This prophete I will stryke he the shepheard or was not written in my graundfathers coppye, & therefore I do geasse that this or some other like he woulde hys selfe haue written.

A him, that he might lightely cast it from hym. Whoe of this opinion, leadeth me also both the processe of the bytōye, and the very wordes of him that wrote the same. And amonge them that taken that he was one of the apostles, the mosse parte thinke it was Saynt John. But the selfe same Saynt Johns owne wordes here folowynge, maketh me thinke that opinion to haue small likelihood to be true, where he writeth thus.

Sequebatur autem Iesum, Simon Petrus et alius discipulus, discipulus autem ille erat notus pontifici, et introiuit cum Iesu in atrium pontificis, Petrus autem stabat ad ostium foras: et exiuit ergo discipulus alius qui erat notus pontifici, et dixit hostiarie, et introduxit Petrum.

And after Iesus, went Simon Peter and an other disciple, and that disciple was well knowen to the byshop, and with Iesus he entred into the byshoppes hall, and Peter stode at ydōre withoute. Then forth went thother disciple that was well knowen to the byshop, and spake to the mayde that kepte the dōre and let Peter in.

They that wyte that it was Saynt John theuangelist that folowed Christ and shapd away whan he was lyke to haue bene taken, dooe somewhat stagger hereat, that he shoulde cast of hys lenen there, and naked flee awaye from them. Which poynte as it semed coulde not well stande with those thinges that forthwith ensued, as that he entred into the byshoppes hawle, and let in Peter (for all menne agree that that was the Cuangeliste) and so neuer leste hym till he came to the place where he was crucified, and finally all the whyle he honged on the crosse, stode by hym with his mosse dearelye beloued mother, one pure byrgin with an other, and at hys recommendacion tooke hir fro thenceforth as hys owne. And without question in all thys whyle, and in all these places, hadde he euermore clothes vpon hym, as he that was one of Christs disciples and none of that shamelesse secte of Cinikes. And therefore though hys wisdomed serued him well to know, yf he shoulde not sticke to haue hys bodye scene all naked, where nede or necessitie requaired it, yet without any cause of his owne choyse, so to goe abrode in open sight naked, the maydenlye shamefastnes that he hadde in him, woulde not shewne suffer him so to doe.

Howe to auoyde this inconueniencence they saye that he went into some coynert in the mene whyle, and apparayled hym selfe a freshe: vpon which poynt though I purpose not presently to kepe any dispicions, yet is it not (as me seemeth) any thing likely so to be, specially wch I doe here so well see, that he and Peter still folowed, and with Iesus entred into the house of Annas, who was father in lawe to the byshop Capphas. Agayn doth this much moue me to be of theyr mynde, which suppose that thys young man was none of thapostles, but some seruaunte of the house where Christ was at his maundie, that theuangelist Saynt Marke dorbe in one selfe place thewe, both that thapostles fledde away and that yet this young man taried still behynde, where he wyrteth after thys sorte.

Tunc discipuli eius relinquentes eum, omnes fugerunt. Adolescens autem quidam sequebatur eum.

Then his disciples forsakyngge hym, fledde away every chone. But a certain young man folowed him still.

Loe here he sayeth that the Apostles fledde, he sayth not that some of theym fledde, but that they fledde all. And that one taried behynde & came after Christ, not of his Apostles, (for gone alreadye were they euery chone) but a certayne younge manne: and as it shoulde seme some straunger, whose name epyther he knewe not, or elles thought it dayne to rehearse. So that thys younge man in myne opinion, partely vpon the report he had heard of Christ before, and partly for that he presetly saw in him as he serued him at the table where he sate with hys disciples, fyrst by the secreete woorking of the holy ghaſte, conceiued a seruente affectyon towardes hym, and after wardes of hys owne mere deuocion when Christ after his supper departed and wente hys waye, he folowed hym, though somewhat awke from the Apostles perchauce, yet still in companys with them, and sate downe with them and rose with them, and at last stepped in amongest them. whan these wretched captiues sodaynely came vpon him to take hym. After this, whereas all the Apostles every one for feare fledd awaye whyle the souldiers were amased and tooke little heede vnto them, this younge man as he that wist well that what loue he bare to Christ was yet to no manne knowen, was yet so muche the bolder still to abyde thereby. But Loorde how harde a matter is it to loue, and not disclose it. This younge man for all he was among

Amongest the thickest of them that mortally maligned Christ, yet by his pafe & other his demeanour so bewrayed he himself, that they al might wel perceiue, that he whan all the reste had forsaken hym, thus folowed Christe still, not to hurte hym, but meanyng to dooe him seruaice. Wherupon they espyng at length that al y remnant of Christes company wer fled away, vpo this yong man in a gret fury began they to take hold, whō they saw al alone so boldely folowynge him. Which thing maketh me verely beleue that they no lesse ment, then to haue serued al the apostles in like sort, had they not while they wer thus amased, sodeinly escaped fro the: so y therby did y take place y Christ had by way of commaundement said vnto the before, let these (my disciples) depart: which saying Christes pleasure was, shold chiefly serue for his specially chose apostles: yet not for the only, but y moze bounteously to extende his liberall goodnes, he would it should serue for this yong mā beside, which being not called into the blessed felowship of his apostles, of his own accorde folowed the, & truly wounde in among the. By meanes wherof did Christ both better declare his own vnknewē power, & y moze opened y feblenes of this lewd rabble, which not onely of ouersight let goe his eleuen apostles whō they wold haue bene loth shold so haue scaped the, but al so as many as they wer, wer not al able to kepe one pore sely yong mā whō they had in they hold already, & as farreforth as I can coiecture, in their own company closed in round about. For as fast as they held him, quickly cast he of his shete and ranne away naked from them.

And verely I put no doubt at al, but that like as he folowed Christ y nyght, & could not be pulled from him, but last of all whan all his apostles were fledde and gone, and not than neyther vntyll they had with greete extremite & force, taken holde on hym, so as sone as he had oportunitie he returned into Christes flock a fresh, & now liueth wchist i euerlasting blisse: wher I pray god we may, & I trust in god we shall, once liue with him: and than what he was, shall wee learne of him, and diuers other thinges done that nyght which he not contained in toizing, shall we to our inestimable comfort muche moze partitely knowe.

But in the meane season, to make our selues the surer and easier passage thither, it shall stand vs in no litle vrede, yf we by this sleeping of the apostles before they were taken, and this yong mannes shapynge after he was taken, wyl picke oute some wholesome aduertisementes for oure soules behoofe by the waye, to cacpe in our tozney with vs for the better atchieuyng of the same. For thauent fathers of the church gene vs counsaile to beware, that none of vs vppon ouer muche confydence of oure owne strengthe, shoulde wplyngly withoute discrecion byng our selues in daunger, haplye to displease God. And therefore yf any man misfortune to come in such place, where he perceyueh he shall bee in hatarde to bee soyled to offende God, there would I aduise him to dooe as the Appostles dyde here, whyche before they were taken, spedily gotte theym theyr waye. Howbeit by this it is not ment, that the Appostles are to be commended for theyr fleenge. Whyche though Christe of hys insynpte mercy parmytted them for theyr scaply to do, yet dyde he nothyng praye it at all, but sozetolde theym that the selfe same nyght yf shoulde bee an occasyon for them to fall. But yf we feele our selues anye thyng feble and faynte hearted, than maye wee all so farre forth folowe theyr example and flee, as we may thereby withoute synne auoyde the peryll of further mischiese. Otherwyse yf a manne shynke awape, whan God biddeth him to abyde still by it (eyther for hys owne wealthe, or for theirs whome hee seeth he hath cure and charge of) and boldelye to truste in hym, this man yf hee chaunce not to doo it, for sauing his temporall lyfe, or rather to save the trueth (yf he doe it to saue hys life here) thys manne playeth the starke foole in dede. For what greater folye canne there bee deuyed, than to sette moze by the shorte wretched time of this life, than by the euerlastyng blisse in heauen.

But yf he so doe to wypane hymselfe endelesse wealthe to come, as yf hee hap to boyde, for feare he mighte bee enforced to offende Godde, herein dothe hee bothe verely lewdelye and foolishlye to, sythe it is alwayes accōpted an heinous crime to forsake a mans master. And he that so forsakerh hym, that he vterlye vspayreth of hys helpe, is as euill as hee that runneth from hys mayster to hys mortall enemye. And what woofse thyng canne there bee ymagined than vppon despayre of goddes gracious as-

Assurance, to flee and geue ouer to his foe, that place in the fiede whiche God hath appointed the to kepe. Agayne what madnesse is this for feare thou mightest myshappe to dysplease Godde by tarynge, by fleyng wythoute all paradventure deadly to offend hym. Marve whan thou maist flee and Godde therewith not displeased, than what sayl better is it for the to be going betymes than tarynge tyll thou be caughte, to fall in daunger of an outrageous offence. An easye matter is it, and (so it bre not agaynste Goddes wil) a verie sure also, to haste the awaye in tyme, where on the tother tyde to stand tyll by it and syghte, bothe harde is it and daungerous.

But yet of traeth this ponge mannes ensauple teacheth vs, what maner of manne they be, that maye longeste and moste safely abide, and yf they fortune to be taken, shall best be able to breake loose out of theyr takers handes agayn. For the sayde ponge manne albeit he a bove last of al, and neuer departed from Christe tyll he was layd handes on and caughte, yet because he had not manye clothes vpon him, but only a bare plain linnen sheete, and that neyther surely sewed vnto him, nor fast girded aboute him, but sleightly cast on his bare body at aduerture so that he mighte easilye shake it of agayn, thys ponge manne I saue sodenly cheswe it from him, & leauinge it behynde him in their handes y caughte him, ranne awaye from them naked, and as a man might saue lest the the shales to pledge and toke hymselfe y kernell.

And what betokeneth this vnto vs? What els trowe you, but that lyke wyse as a greete gozbelved glotton, so cozpulent and fatte that he canne scantelye goe, or he that is ouer pestered with manny clothes, is nothyng fyt or handesom to runne apase, so whan anye daungerous persecucion begynnerh to drawe nere, hardelye shall that parsonne flee and saue hymselfe therefro, that hath manye bagges of rychele hangynge rounde aboute hym. No nor very fast wyll he runne neyther, whiche how lytle so ever he hath on his backe, is yet so harde and straght gyte therein, that breth canne he drawe his breathe. For better shall he flee that hath many garments and canne soone shake them of, than he that haungng fewe, hath them yet so surely fastened about his necke, that goe whither so ever he will, nedes must he cary them with hym.

We see it happeth otherwhyles, but not so oft as I would wish we did, howbeit (lauded be god) we see it so somtime, that gret riche and substanciall menne, are content rather to forgoe all that ener they haue in this wo:ld at once, than with Goddes displeasure sinnefullpe to reserue anye one penyne thereof. These folke nowe althoughe they haue manye clothes vppon them, yet because they be not so straght gyte vnto them, as sone as present peryll causeth them for to flee, doe easily cast them of and safely scape awaye.

Contrary wyse some doe we see (and of those farre moe than I woulde there were) whiche haungng but fewe clothes and verie lytle substance, haue neuer thelesse so fastned their affectio to y base beggerly baggage, y soner wold they be costred to haue theyr skin plucked from their backs, than be berieued of such beggerlye trash. Such a one hadde nedes to gethim away betymes. For if he be once caught by his clothes and thereby once in hande, rather wyll he dye for it than leaue his sheete behynde him. And to be hyselye, by this ensauple of thys pong manne are we taught, for feare of tribulacion that maye sodenly fall vppon vs, and daunger that vnwares maye growe towarde vs, in case we should haue occasion to flee, cuer moze to be in a readynesse, and neither to be so overcharged with manye clothes, nor agayne so fast buckled in one neither, but that as soone as necessitie shall forse vs, we may cast of our light linnen sheete, and naked scape awaye.

Now who so lyst to looke a lytle further, maye see here set forth for hym to learne by this ponge mannes deed, another lesson besyde, of muche moze force and efficacye: as that the body is lyke a garmente to the soule, whiche the soule putteth on when it first entreteth into the wo:ld, and whan by death it departeth hence, casteth of agayne. Wherefore the soule is so muche moze to be esteemed than the bodye, as the bodye is moze excellent than the garmente that it weareth. And as made a parte were it for a manne to leaue his soule for the sauyng of hys bodye, as yf some frantypke foole would rather haue his body spilt, than departe with his pild cloke. For of the bodye in thys wyse speaketh Christ: Is not the body moze wo:th than the ly he p̄s̄erth h̄ soule, why what art thou any man make for his soule? And I say vnto you my friends: Be not afrayd of I wil tel you whom you ought to feare.

Feare him that after he hath kyled the body, hath power to cast it into the fyze

Thus doth the hystorie of this yonge man, put vs in remēbrance what state our body (which is but as it were the garmente of our soule) shoulde be in, addocted to soule fleshly lustes, but by meanes of abstinence consumynge all lothesome groosenesse, be made as light as a fyne linnen sheete. And also that we shoulde not so fasten oure affection, thereunto, but that we coulde in Gods cause be ryght glad to forgoe it. Thys lesson learne we loe of this yonge man here, who beyng in wretched captiues handes, rather than he would be compelled any thynge to do or say, h̄ shoulde fornde to Chyistles dishonour, lest he shete behynde hym, and fledde away naked from them.

A lyke parte vnto this yong man here, playd there a great while ago an other yong manne before, the holy and innocent Patriarche Joseph I meane, a notable president to all that shoulde come after, that as ware shoulde they be in es-chelwpyng the danger of incestuous adul-that he was of parsonage comelye and amiable to beholde, whom Putipher of his bondslauē had made high Steward of his house, was Putiphers wyfe by castyng her eye vppon him so fore ennamozed, & incensed with her outragpous sensual lust, wayed at length so frantick, that forsyng for no shame both in wodes and countenaunce, vndelyzed offer-red the her selfe vnto hym: and as vnwplyng as she founde hym, neuer ceased by sondry meanes to allure hym.

Pea and whan he playnely refused her offer, layde she handes on hym & caught hym faste by his cloke, and so woulde this woman (Wh what dishonesty was this) by force haue rauished this manne to commytte so horryble an acte, and knowpng therewith howe seopardous it would be for hym, to stande styll by it and abyde the bynte, where presents matter of carnall temptacion was mynystrred vnto hym, and that the sureste remedy for a manne to master his sensualite was for to flye awaye, lest he cloke in that beastly womans handes, and makpng haste away, lone gate him out of doores.

Howbeit as I was about to tell ye, it is not our cloke, gowne, coate, or any other lyke apparayle of our bodye, which we must be content onely to caste from vs, rather than we would doe any deadly synne, but our owne bodye, whiche is but the garmente or besture of oure soul, in that respect ought we to forsake.
For yf we labour with goddes displeasure synnefully to saue it, than doe we bothe leese it and our soule also. But yf for goddes sake we canne fynde in oure heartes paciently to beare the losse ther-of, and lykewyse as an adder so longe rubbeth his olde wythcred skyn (whiche I trowe is called in latin Senectus) among thornes and bypers tyll at laste he cast it quyte awaye, and so leauynge it in the hedge commeth forth the freshe and yong agayne, so if we accorpyng to Chyistles counsayle, become wyse as serpentes, and rubbing of this olde ruelled bodye of ours as the adder dothe his skinne, among the thornes of tribulacion for the loue of God, leaue it behynde vs in the worlde, we shal therewith become freshe and yonge agayne, and so be shortlye carryed vp into heauen, where we shal neuer ware olde after.
