

From Letters and Papers, Foreign and Domestic, Henry VIII, vol. 4: 1524-30, edited by J. S. Brewer. London: Her Majesty's Stationary Office, 1875, p. 2720.

[1529]

Cott. App. XLVIII. 24. B.

M. St. P. I. 352.

6098. [WOLSEY TO CROMWELL.]

“Myn onely ayder in thys myn intollerable anxiete and hevynes,” I thank you for your kind letters. Now that the Parliament is prorogued, and that the King intends, before he leaves York Place, to make an arrangement for Wolsey's entertainment, asks him to make arrangements most to Wolsey's comfort with Mr. Secretary (Gardiner), Norfolk and Suffolk, reminding them what was promised to him, relying upon which he made his submission, and put himself in the King's hands, who by the rigor of his laws could not have had so much as he now has. Trusts that their determination will be honorable as well as charitable. Wishes to know how he has sped today. If he does not come tomorrow, hopes he will bring on Monday the resolution of everything. Trusts that Mr. Nores will show his old love towards him. Mr. Secretary has promised to do his best. Forbears to send any one to solicit his causes, leaving them entirely in Cromwell's hands. Asher, this afternoon.

Hol., mutilated, pp. 2.